TELL-TALE FLAKES?

ITCHY SCALP?

UGLY SCALES?

LOOK OUT FOR INFECTIOUS DANDRUFF!

Start NOW with LISTERINE!

Take these signs seriously. They may be a warning of the infectious type of dandruff, so common and frequently so stubborn! Don't delay. Neglect may aggravate the condition. And don't rely on one application of some makeshift, "over-night" remedy to treat a stubborn infection.

Medical—Not Magical Treatment

Your common sense tells you that it's wise to treat an infection with an antiseptic which attacks large numbers of the germs accompanying the infection.

So, be wise . . . start right in with Listerine Antiseptic and massage. It's a simple, delightfully easy, medical treatment.

Kills "Bottle Bacillus"

Listerine gives hair and scalp an antiseptic bath . . . kills millions of germs associated with infectious dandruff, including Pityrosporum ovale, the stubborn "bottle bacillus" which many authorities recognize as a causative agent of infectious dandruff.

Those distressing, loosened dandruff flakes begin to disappear. Itching and inflammation are relieved. Your scalp feels healthier, your hair looks cleaner.

76% Improved in Clinical Tests

We've received countless letters from men and women all over America, praising Listerine to the skies for bringing them relief from dandruff's distressing symptoms!

Not only that . . . there's even greater evidence, from scientific quarters. In a series of severe clinical tests, fully 76% of the dandruff sufferers who used Listerine Antiseptic and massage twice daily showed complete disappearance of or marked improvement in the symptoms within a month!

If you have the slightest sign of infectious dandruff, don't wait . . . get after it now with Listerine Antiseptic, the tested treatment. The large economy-size bottle will save you money.

LAMBERT PHARMACAL CO., St. Louis, Mo.

The LISTERINE TREATMENT

MEN: Douse full strength Listerine Antiseptic on the scalp morning and night. WOMEN: Part the hair at various places, and apply Listerine Antiseptic right along the part with a medicine dropper, to avoid wetting the hair excessively.

Always follow with vigorous and persistent massage with fingers or a good hairbrush. Continue the treatment so long as dandruff is in evidence. And even though you're free from dandruff, enjoy a Listerine Antiseptic massage once a week to guard against infection. Listerine is the same antiseptic that has been famous for more than 50 years as a mouth wash and gargle.

"PROTECTING THE AMERICAN HOME"

In the late 1700's, a young man from Connecticut, about to set out to establish a home in the New Hampshire Grants, now Vermont, purchased a plot of ground from an alleged lawyer and land speculator whom he met in a tavern. When, after many hardships, he arrived at the location of his land, he found the real owner in possession. It turned out that he had spent his hard-earned savings for a worthless title to another man's property.

— DANVIS FOLKS by Rowland Robinson, Vermont Author

Drawing Up the "Writin's"

THE YOUNG MAN of today need have no fear that the "property" won't be there if he has invested his savings in life insurance.

If you are a young married man with growing children, do not fail to look into National Life's Family Income Policy. We know of no other form of life insurance which offers more complete protection or pays larger benefits.

It provides for the payment of extra income during the critical years when your growing children are dependent.

How it works. Suppose you should die suddenly, what would your wife and children receive? Illustration: Insured's age, 35. Sum insured, $10,000. Family Income, 20 year plan. Suppose death occurs five years after the policy takes effect.

The National Life of Vermont will pay your family:

1. $100 a month for the remaining 15 years of the "20 year plan" . . . $18,000
2. At the end of the Family Income Period, the sum of . . . 10,000

Total . . . $28,000

3. If you outlive these maximum needs, the policy through dividend accumulations may be made to mature as an endowment to provide you with a retirement income.

Is this kind of life insurance expensive? No. Between the ages of 25 to 45, it will cost you only a few dollars a month more than ordinary life insurance. Why not look into it? Use the coupon below.

Housewife

Sirs:

Three cheers for LIFE for giving the American housewife her just due in your Sept. 22 issue. Jane Amberg is typical in proving how any American woman can manage a home and children and still have time for father and their friends. However, I'll bet hundreds who read your article threw up their hands and said: "One woman could not do it all."

MRS. W. L. MANN

Plainfield, N. J.

Sirs:

It is gratifying to know that while our men work to make this nation strong, our part in it does not go unnoticed. It is good to see in print those things close to home that are our very lives. We mothers who are making homes and rearing the future sons and daughters of this great country will carry on.

MRS. H. A. TENNEY

San Diego, Calif.

Sirs:

Mrs. Jane Amberg to my mind is not nearly so representative of the American wife, mother and housewife as she is the epitome of all that's best in them. Here's an anonymous poem I ran across which seems to fit her picture:

*I want a wife to roast and toast, to boil and bake and brew;
To pickle, can and make preserves,
and every kind of stew.
I want a wife to knit and sew,
and patch, and darn and mend;
To keep the buttons on my clothes,
repairing every rend.
I want a wife to mop and scrub,
to wash and rinse and wring;
One that can in the parlor shine,
and play and dance and sing; . . .
She must be gay and full of fun,
a smiling, happy elf.
If there is scolding to be done,
I'll see to it myself.*

*I want a wife to cheer my life—
a bachelor's a dunce;
The girl who will may fill the bill,
but don't all speak at once.*

JULIUS C. JAQUIER

Jersey City, N. J.

Sirs:

Like some 10,000,000 other housewives, Mrs. Amberg is being served by the Fuller Brush man. A Fuller Brush man myself, I was pleased to see her using the dry mop, shower brush and other useful items, including the free sample.

STEPHAN KAUFMANN

New Britain, Conn.

Sirs:

Heaven's sake, watch your propaganda. In Boston we boys get 50¢ for minding babies up to 12 o'clock. Please refrain from mentioning and giving support to reduction of our hard-fought-for wage level. Thirty-five cents is cricket, perhaps, where the Ambergs are concerned because of local conditions. But around here it's only a fair fee.

● Mr. Amberg writes: "Your most serious error was in reporting Hattie's wages at 35¢ an hour, instead of 30¢. I am sure that her other clients will immediately increase her wages to keep up with LIFE's Housewife. That means we will do likewise."—ED.

British Prisoners

Sirs:

1941 looks at 1916

THINGS have changed a lot in 25 years and yet there is much that is the same.

In 1916 it was Preparedness; in 1941, National Defense. But now the scale is bigger, the pace faster. There was pressure on the telephone business then. The pressure is infinitely greater now. New training camps; new aviation fields; new munitions plants—all need telephones. Every one is moving faster and when a Nation hurries it does it by telephone. The Bell System spent 94 millions on new construction in 1916. It is spending more than 420 millions in 1941.

The entire Bell System organization is giving "first call" to defense. We believe you would want it that way.

"Ingram's lather-formation, Broncho, is modern—cooling—to condition your skin for shaving while it softens up your whiskers. It foams up like a team-cheer—a billowy White Wave of lather to smooth your razor's advance!"

"Broncho," I say, "you're being mouse-trapped. Your shaving system's as out of date as moleskins. Each time you use that cream, you're sticking your face out for stings and terrors. Change to Ingram's quick-action, cooling cream!"

"Coach," Broncho exults, "Ingram's is the perfect facial defense against razor burn! My blade glides along as smooth as an end-sweep in practice! And that cooling lather's as invigorating as a cold shower! My face feels grand!"

Thousands of men have found Ingram's the answer to the shaver's prayer—for Ingram's de luxe lather is more than a fast whisker-wilting. It's a facial refresher too! No lotions or tonics needed! #### Baby Half-Ton

Sirs:

The expression on the face of Phil, the baby gorilla (LIFE, Sept. 22), is certainly one of gravest doubt! Maybe he heard your fantastic prediction of half a ton as his future weight. Nobody but New Dealer Jesse Jones could dream up a figure like that.

According to Mr. Floyd Young, Lincoln Park Zoo expert, the largest gorilla ever shot weighed 600 lb. The San

Perspiration is Acid

... DON'T LET IT WRECK YOUR CHERISHED STOCKINGS!

Exactly how NEW IVORY SNOW care combats this danger... helps stockings wear so much longer it's just like getting an extra pair free every 2 months!

• Those horrid runs... those precious stockings of yours that wear out so soon... all too often these stocking troubles have a cause few women even suspect.

That cause is acid perspiration.

This is the timely warning now being stressed by many textile experts. Normal perspiration is distinctly acid. It eats the life and saps the strength of dainty stocking fabrics!

The simple care that's now advised is prompt washing, after each wearing, with Ivory Snow.

Ivory Snow is a remarkable new soap that comes in quick-dissolving "snowdrop" form—hence its name! It is pure—Ivory-pure. Gives rich suds in 3 seconds, even in cool water.

Quickly, surely, safely, Ivory Snow removes acid perspiration and other soil. Don't be careless about washing stockings—it costs money! Tests show that with this daily Ivory Snow care you actually get up to  $\frac{1}{2}$  more wear... even from filmy "dress-up" stockings.

Ivory Snow's gentle care helps pretty undies wear far longer too. Don't be among the last to change to new and better ways! Remove dangerous acid perspiration with Ivory Snow.

THE DANGER OF ACID PERSPIRATION. Every day, in all seasons, the normal human body gives off at least a pint of acid perspiration—much of it unseen, unfelt. This acid perspiration quickly starts to weaken fibres of stockings and undies.

"Today stockings must give more wear
So smart women guard every pair—
They rinse them each day
This quick, easy way
With Ivory Snow's gentle care!"

... Miss Ivory Snow

ONLY IVORY SNOW COMBINES BOTH THESE ADVANTAGES

- 1 Pure soap made under a patented process in quick-dissolving tiny "snowdrop" form...
- 2 Bursts into pure, rich suds in 3 seconds... even in cool water.

That is why Ivory Snow acts so quickly, so surely against dangerous acid perspiration... to help stockings last far longer.

Color Television

Sirs:

I'm afraid you slipped on color television (LIFE, Sept. 22). If, as you say, the color disc contains red, blue and green, where does the yellow come in? The three primary colors, as every schoolchild learns, are not red, blue and green, but red, blue and yellow.

In printing and lithography, nearly all combinations of color can be achieved with but the three primary colors—red, blue and yellow.

Engle's Harvest

Sirs:

The poem American Harvest by Paul Engle (LIFE, Sept. 22) was fine, but how can a scrapbook artist cut it out? Or is it impossible to get away from column arrangements that print part of a poem on the back of the sheet where some other part of the poem is printed?

As one who farms as well as works with words, raises Black Angus (including Etna, the Homing Heifer, with a certain local fame for having a will of her own) "not without dust and heat," this editor feels moved to ask if Mr. Engle ever personally extracted a painful of milk from one of this opinionated beef breed.

. . . THE NEW YORKER'S PETER ARNO IS
TOP SATIRIST OF COSMOPOLITAN LIFE

Peter Arno, the sophisticated Manhattanite who drew the cartoons on these pages, is one of the highest-paid artists in America. Under exclusive contract to The New Yorker, he gets a reputed $500 apiece for 50 cartoons a year, nets a good deal more from advertising jobs and collections of his cartoons in book form. His seventh collection, from which these pictures are taken, has just been published by Simon & Schuster as Peter Arno's Cartoon Revue ($2).

"WELL, BACK TO THE OLD DRAWING BOARD."

"NEVER MIND THE DAMNED CAKE! WHERE ARE THE REPORTERS?"

But Peter Arno is something more than a well-paid cartoonist. He is also a social satirist of the first rank whose work has been compared to that of Daumier and Rowlandson. He is the father of a whole great school of modern caricaturists, who imitate his bold black-and-white drawing technique, his favorite subjects, and his punchy one-line captions which Americans by the thousands think are funnier than anything else in this world.

Although Arno's cartoons delight in turning a sudden, piercing spotlight on human frailties they are seldom savage, are saved by the fact that people usually recognize enough of themselves in the subjects to laugh sympathetically.

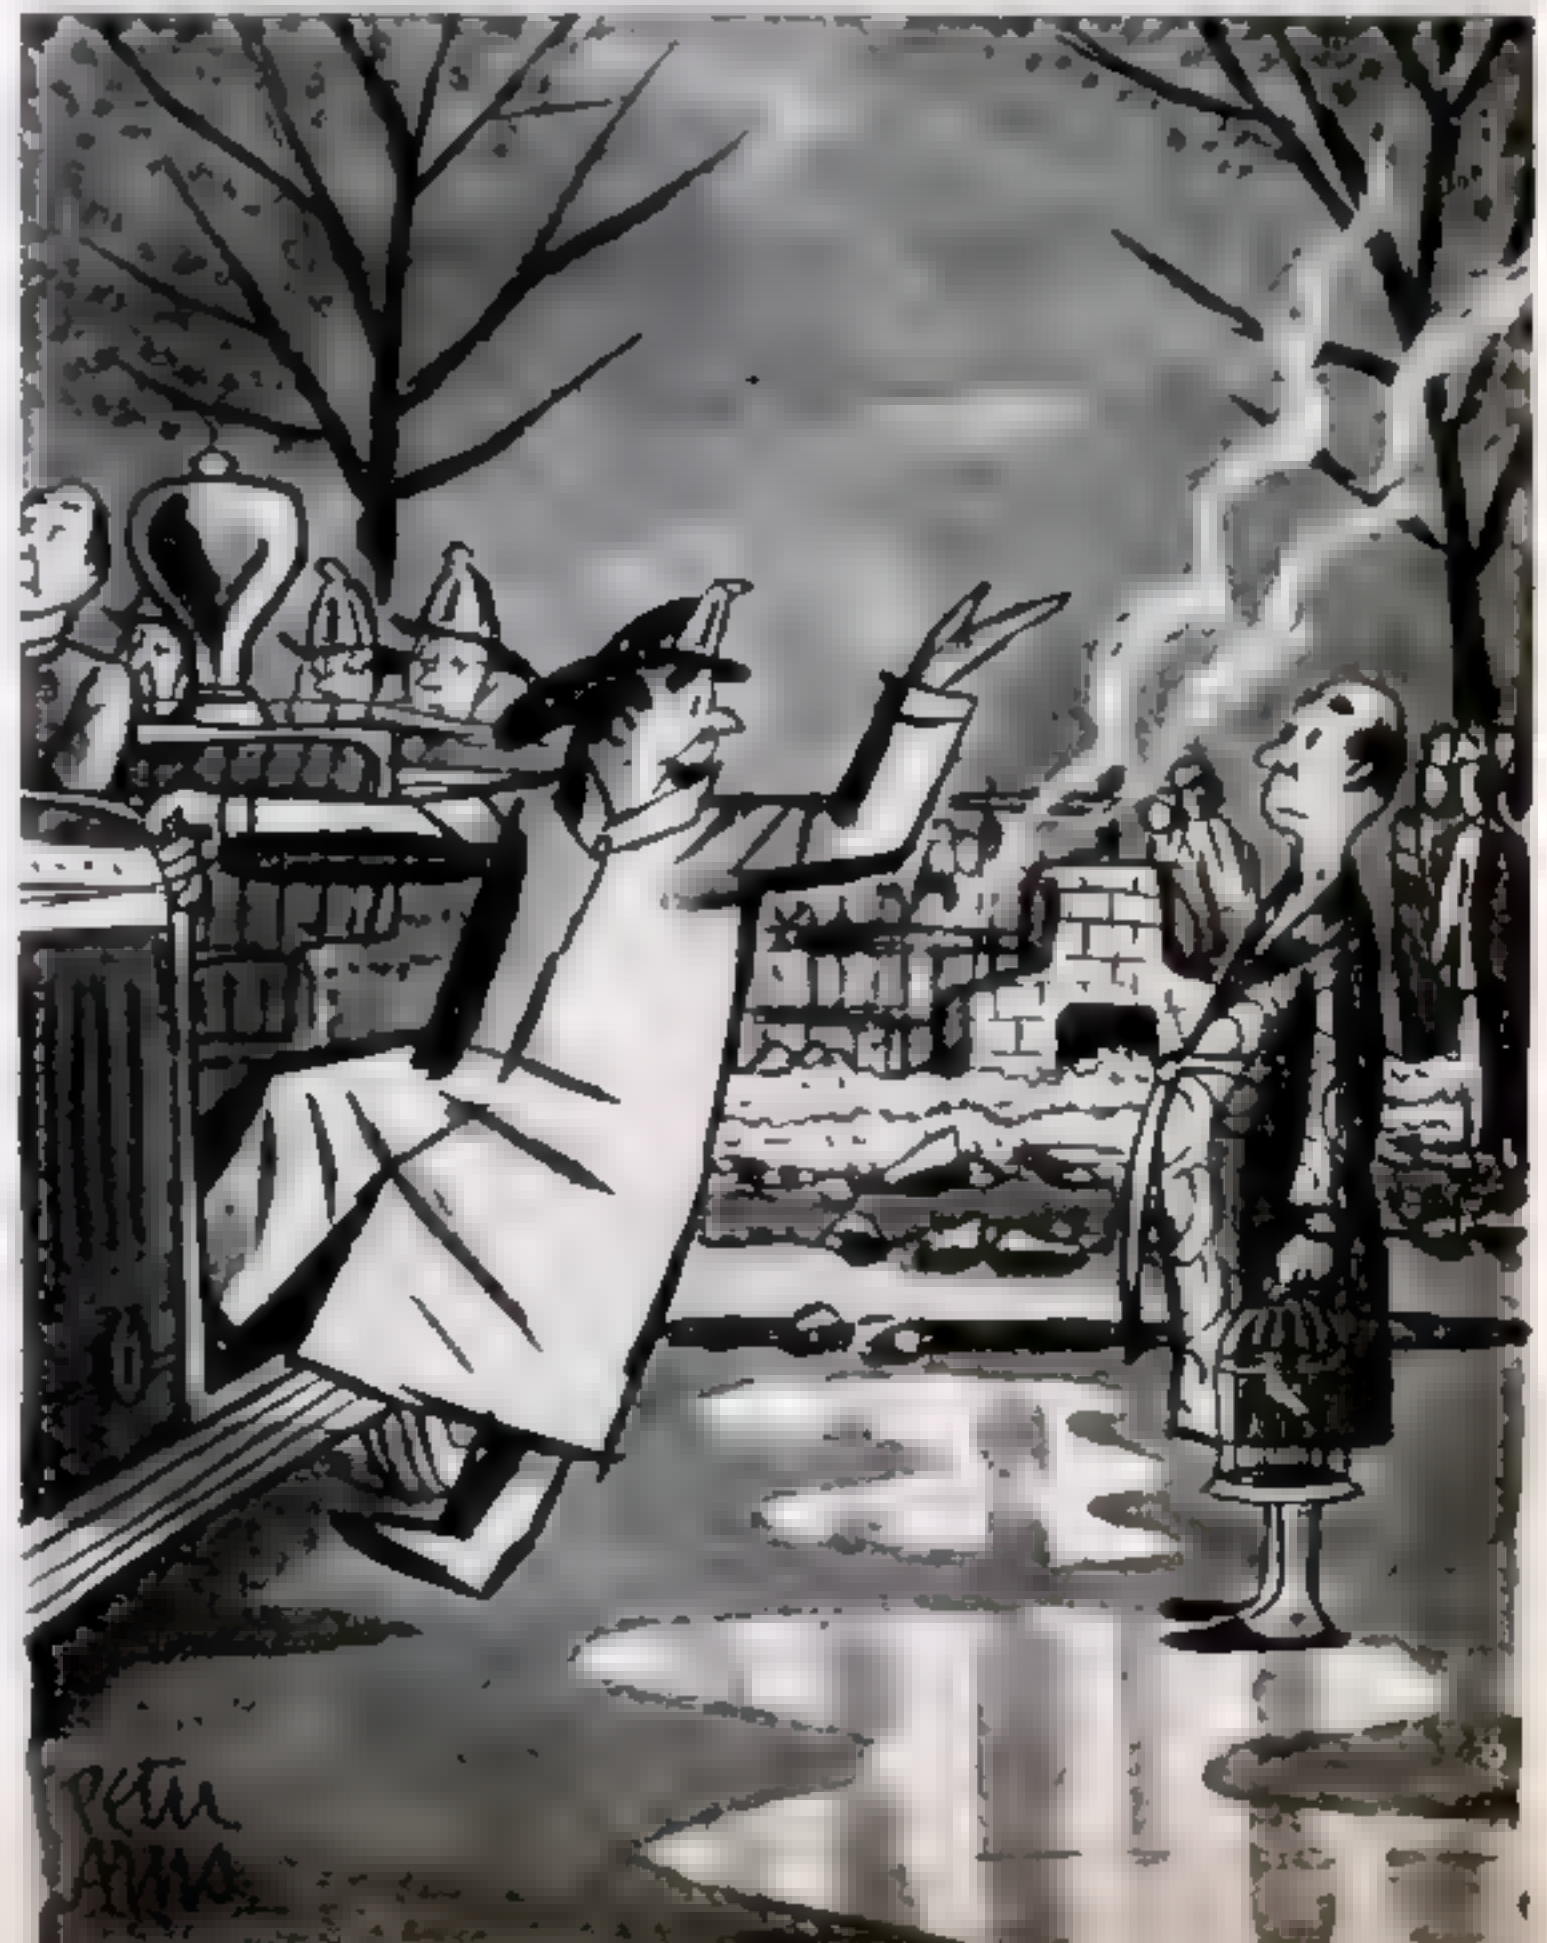

Arno is 40, a Yale graduate. His real name is Curtis Arnoux Peters. Professional gagmen furnish him with some of his ideas but most of them are his own. Says Somerset Maugham in his introduction to

Cartoon Review: "I was a trifle appalled by the real Peter Arno, for this imposing, youthful, witty man was as different from the scraggy, despondent, timid, thwarted little fellow of the cartoons as his own brush strokes differ from those of Leonardo. I cannot help wishing perhaps a little wistfully that my original hypothesis was right, for there is a pathetic quality in that melancholy lover of the cartoons who, though winning near the goal, never, never kisses."

"YOU NEVER CAN TELL WHAT THEY'RE THINKING, CAN YOU?"

"WELL, IF YOU EVER NEED US AGAIN JUST GIVE US A RING."

“A girl’s got to find out Somehow!”

A LADY DOESN'T EAVESDROP—unless she’s just got to find out what the women behind her are so excited about—

“Imagine me, sleeping as though I had a million dollars—on percale sheets!” cooed the blonde behind me.

“You—and everybody else,” said her friend, “since Cannon came out with percale sheets for practically the same price as heavy-duty muslin!”

Percale at a muslin price—the neatest bit of news I’d overheard in months! Believe me, I skipped right out and bought Cannon Percale Sheets for every bed in my home. Mmm! I’m sleeping pretty from now on—are you?

Shh! Want some more low-down on sheets? You’ll learn a lot—quick and easy—in this Cannon quiz. Try it!

Cannon PERCALE SHEETS

They cost about the same as heavy-duty muslin!

MADE BY THE MAKERS OF CANNON TOWELS AND HOSIERY

Cannon’s Quick Quiz on Sheets

How well does percale launder?

Cannon Percale launders beautifully—always keeps its dazzling whiteness. And here is an amazing fact! In a recent survey, Cannon Percale Sheets which had had a year’s actual use—with regular launderings—were voted softer and finer than brand-new sheets!

What’s the difference between muslin and percale?

Cannon Percale Sheets are woven with 25% more threads to the square inch than the best-grade muslin. A better grade of cotton is used in Cannon Percale. The threads are finer and more highly twisted. Percale is lighter, smoother, more luxurious than muslin.

Can I save money with Cannon Percale?

Yes! Cannon Percale Sheets, because they’re lighter, can actually save you about $3.25 a year for each bed, at average pound laundry rates. (If you do your own washing, you’ll find these lighter sheets lots easier to handle and iron than muslin.)

How does Cannon Percale wear in comparison with muslin?

We talked with a large number of women who had used both muslin and Cannon Percale Sheets. Of these women, 14.2% thought muslin wore better than percale. But 40.5% said Cannon Percale wore better than muslin. The rest were not sure, or thought they wore about the same.

"FIVE MINUTES to spare," Bill said, when we turned into the station. But his watch lied... we hadn't five seconds. Why, I didn't even get a chance to kiss mother good-bye!

"Whee, that was a narrow one," I gasped, catching my breath. "Not another train for three hours." "And not another boat in three days," added Bill. We were still talking about it when the conductor came to get our tickets.

"Honeymoon, eh?" he smiled... (we were simply dripping rice!) "Looks like you came near missing it." "I should have set my watch," Bill apologized. "Or you should have a watch like mine," said the railroad man.

So that's when we learned about Time Inspection... how 300,000 railroad men carry watches that must pass it regularly... that's why so many railroad men carry Hamiltons.

"Look here, Mrs. Stone," Bill proposed, then and there. "We haven't really bought anything to celebrate this wedding. Why don't we take that check your uncle gave us and blow ourselves to an accurate start... with a pair of Hamiltons!"

THE BATTLE OF LOUISIANA

In Louisiana and Texas the U. S. Army recently completed its greatest sham battle. For five days a Red army of Lieutenant General Ben Lear locked grips with a Blue army of General Walter Krueger. Three hundred and fifty thousand men took part. In the end the Reds were defeated.

To cover the battle, LIFE sent two reporter-photographer teams—one for each army. They were given khaki uniforms, guns and made fair game for capture. They lived with the troops and ate canned rations. Last week LIFE published eleven pages of pictures showing the battle. Here LIFE publishes its reporters' diaries.

WITH THE RED ARMY

by JOHN FIELD

First Day. The war began today at dawn. With Photographer Ralph Morse I drove for five hours beside a 35-mile-long convoy of Red army tanks, trucks and motorized infantry invading Blue territory near Shreveport, La. These forces belong to the First Armored Division, best equipped in entire U. S. Yet Blue army planes were constantly overhead—bombing the convoy. We seldom saw a plane of our own.

Second Day. Today I went in search of the Red army's "lost battalions." Two battalions of the 41st armored infantry had fought their way far into enemy lines. Now they were caught. For conveyance Jack Redding of the Chicago Herald American and I had two peeps, the three-seater "buggies" that are the Army's pride. Two privates and a lieutenant were with us, and among the five of us we had three pistols.

Starting cautiously, we drove past Many, La., following a convoy of Red half-tracks and trucks. Suddenly the leading half-track stopped. The Blues had dynamited the bridge up ahead and no traffic could move. For two hours we waited while Red engineers built a new bridge. Then we drove on, but soon saw great columns of dust approaching. It was another Red column, but in full retreat. The Blues were right behind.

We turned and ran, too. But as we raced toward the main highway, a Red car stopped us and told us that the Blues had already advanced up the highway and cut off our line of retreat.

Then began the wildest ride of my life. Off onto bumpy little country roads, paralleling the main roads, our peeps raced at 40 m.p.h. Nearby cannon boomed and machine guns pop-popped. Suddenly in the dense pine woods ahead, we thought we saw something move. We raced our peeps off the road, got out and deployed through the woods. The two privates with us were the first to spot the enemy. They were advancing on us up the main road and through the woods. Crashing and bumping against trees, falling in the mud, we raced back to our peeps.

As the motors roared, the Blues spotted us. "Bang-bang" went their guns, but nothing hit us and we reached the highway. As we raced around the gas station at Fisher, we saw more Blues ahead of us. Now we had enemy both in front and back of us.

The U. S. Army's little peep, however, is a versatile vehicle. Off the highway and straight into the woods we went. We did not go slowly, picking our way, but darted through the woods like frightened mosquitoes. Dodging trees, swamps, stumps and gulleys, we drove straight through the forest. The peep never stopped or got stuck.

For what seemed like hours we raced on in the forest. It was getting dark and there were no familiar landmarks. The trees were so thick we could not see the stars in the sky. But the shouts and shots

It shook us up...in more ways than one!

THE early motor cars were crude and uncomfortable. They shook us up, and they shook the country up too; shook it into a new pattern of living.

In those days, lubrication was crude, too. And when Quaker State Motor Oil was first introduced, over a quarter of a century ago, it was so advanced in its performance that it shook the automotive industry into quick attention.

Today, the motor car industry has surged to undreamed-of heights . . . and Quaker State has kept pace. In fact, the New Stabilized Quaker State Motor Oil is actually far ahead of any lubrication requirements of the modern automobile engine.

Quaker State has perfected a new method of eliminating the unstable elements from motor oil to produce a new kind of oil which resists oxidation and its resulting sludge, varnish and corrosion.

The remarkable quality and stability which have been painstakingly attained in Stabilized Quaker State Motor Oil give you surest possible protection against repairs and depreciation. It's engineered to battle heat and friction successfully! This greatly improved oil still sells for 35¢ per quart. And you'll probably find it costs no more than cheaper oils because you won't have to add so many quarts between drain-and-refill periods.

of the Blues grew fainter and fainter. In the woods and darkness we were safe.

After escaping from the Blues we ate dinner in the woods. It was cold ration "C" and powdered coffee. Not very good but when you are hungry even ration "C" tastes like Long Island duck.

On the way back to Many we were riding blackout along narrow trails. Suddenly, just ahead, a well-concealed light flickered on, then off, then on again. Quickly we stopped and shut off the motors. I lay flat in the dust behind the peeps and waited to see if the strangers would come to investigate. Next I heard a voice cry "Halt." It was one of our privates who had three of the strangers covered with his pistol. Then, behind him, came another voice "Halt, yourself, who goes there." Four more of them had our private covered from behind. Fortunately we found out that they, too, were Reds.

The rest of the night was high comedy. After a cup of black coffee in Many, we left at midnight for the Sabine River which was No Man's Land. Our guide was a Lieutenant Kelly of the 2nd Armored Reconnaissance who had spent the day spying on the Blues by taking off his clothes, renting a boat and paddling up and down the river, like a farmer, right under their noses.

Red outposts grew fewer and fewer as we neared the Sabine. Finally we came to the last before the river. From the Blue side came a great silence. Our scouts said that after the hard work of the last two days, they were fast asleep.

The little outpost of 15 or 20 Reds, however, were wide awake and they wanted action. All they had was one rifle and a scout car, while across the river the Blues had a 75 plus hundreds of light and heavy machine guns. But somebody had an idea: "Let's spoil their sleep. Let's light a couple of smoke pots and fire off the rifle like mad. The damn Blues will think we're starting an attack." Everybody laughed. Two smoke pots were set off and the air was filled with great white clouds. Then we started firing our one rifle. To the Blues it sounded like the prelude to a great attack.

As the din of firing rose above the smoke, the Blues rushed to their guns. There were a few simple pop-pops and then the whole hillside was roaring. In the distance we could hear the Blue motorcyclists racing away with the news of an attack. In the breaks in the firing our men would yell: "Bring up the 81-mm. mortars" or "Sergeant, where'll I put this 50-cal. machine gun?" The "damn Blues" did not sleep the rest of that night.

Third Day. The Reds are doing badly. Their attack has stalled and they have been forced into a defensive position. Tonight, in Winfield, La., Red headquarters are being moved. In the pale blue of blackout lights, trunks and bales crowd the sidewalks. Newspapermen must get out or be captured.

Fourth Day. Our army attacked at dawn today in an effort to regain the offensive. Some progress has been reported but not the successes expected. I accompanied one of the tank columns as it battled through dense woods in enemy country. Blue army A-20 attack bombers dove on us, only to be driven off by Red P-39's and P-40's. The sky was never empty of planes.

That night, deep in enemy country, Redding, Hutchinson and I decided to return to Red territory. We had had virtually no sleep for three days. We had no food and the mosquitoes were vicious. On the way back we came to a bridge that was blown up. With a roar of racing motor and grinding gears, we swished our peep into the water. There it stuck with its wheels grinding in quicksand.

For an hour we tried to put logs under the wheels but it was no use. While I waited in the peep, Hutchinson and Redding went to find some vehicle to pull us out. It was dark and dismal and frightening in the swamp, full of snakes and bugs and strange sounds

Hutchinson and Redding walked seven miles through the swampy darkness. They dared not use a flashlight for fear of being captured. Eventually they got across the lines and found a Red half-track and just before dawn it reached me in the swamp and pulled the peep out.

Fifth Day. This morning was black for the Reds. Control of the air has definitely passed to the Blues. Dive bombers were everywhere, destroying Red ranks and towns. Many was bombed at least once an hour. When we got to Second Armored Division headquarters this morning, there were long faces. It is no rout, but the Reds have been licked Nearer the front troops on foot became more numerous. When we asked one marcher what his outfit was, he replied, "Company A, 147th Infantry," and then added sarcastically, "motorized."

That afternoon we reached Alexandria, La. which the Red army had seized earlier and which the Blues had captured a few hours later. Alexandria reacted to its new army of occupation joyfully, except that the frauleins who give the troops flowers in the German propaganda films were missing.

Soon it began to rain torrents. Soldiers in open trucks hunched their backs into the wind. Soldiers on foot slogged along, cheerfully calling out "taxi, taxi" as we passed. When we saw one column turn into a pasture and prepare to cross the Red River at Alexandria in assault boats, we went to see for ourselves. First the men stood in long lines waiting to get into the boats. Then they slipped and slid down the greasy mud banks of the river and, wading knee deep in mud and water, clambered into the boats. Everyone was cheerful and one man piped up: "I can't tell when I walk out of the rain and into the river anyway."

Later that evening in Alexandria it stopped raining and soldiers were everywhere drying their clothes over little

A painting by Julian Levi for the Capehart Collection: An interpretation of Mozart composing his last opera, "The Magic Flute." This outstanding young genius of the eighteenth century died in poverty—his life a continual struggle against debt, the jealousy of other musicians, and failing health. Yet the grace and beauty of Mozart's music rarely has been surpassed.

A TIME TO WEEP AND A TIME TO LAUGH

How changeable is man! One moment a mood of delight transports him. He will paint, write, build, command—and the world shall see! Then doubt settles on the heart, and man is not so sure.

The bravest of human beings turns to music for inspiration in that hour. From the Capehart Phonograph-Radio come silvery dances, light-hearted and free . . . symphonies to stir new courage . . . chorales that walk the serene path of faith.

For so superlative a phonograph-radio as this is more than a musical instrument. The Capehart is a fresh outlook on life, a guide to harmonious living. It is a creation of man's ingenuity, capable of changing man's moods.

And the Capehart is one of the few products built to an ideal rather than to a price. Into it goes something of the same unhurried craftsmanship that made the Stradivari outstanding among violins. The Capehart has the time-proved record changer that turns the records over, playing 20 records (40 selections) continuously, on both sides or either side—providing three hours or more of priceless music. It has also a brilliant radio unit. Convenient control stations and speakers may be placed throughout your home and grounds.

THE CAPEHART-PANAMUSE

In the Capehart tone-tradition is the Capehart-Panamuse, a superb instrument at more moderate price. Models from $159.50 to $369.50.* For convenient purchase terms, see your authorized Capehart dealer. Consult the classified telephone directory for his name. Write us for beautifully illustrated brochure. The Capehart Division, Farnsworth Television & Radio Corp., Fort Wayne, Ind.

town. The Reds were led by Lieutenant F. I. Fox whose group had spent a glorious day behind the Blue lines putting 20 officers and 35 enlisted men out of action. He appeared to be the sham battle's Sergeant York. He told us in dead earnest: "I'd never have been captured on my dash back to the Red River bridge if I hadn't got caught by a red light in Alexandria."

Second Day. Dear diary, today stunk. On a hot tip that "all hell will break loose over in Texas," we drove 180 miles to have a look. We slept in the car and ate breakfast at 3 a. m. in Orange, Texas, where a tough cabbie accused our soldier-chauffeur of trying to muscle in on the Orange taxi business. Despite the delay we arrived at Blue cavalry headquarters about dawn. The division command post was so well hidden that some of the soldiers from whom we asked directions didn't know where it was or suspected us of being spies. We arrived in time, however, to hear the commander, Major General Innis Swift, yell, "Sergeant, bring me my shirt!"

Unluckily the hot tip that had brought us 180 miles out into Texas was a dud. The only action proved to be our automobile ride.

Third Day. We finally saw a battle, but were almost captured. The blue flag on our cab was broken off in an accident on the way to the front. As we approached Mount Carmel, where the battle later developed, we got stuck in the mud right in front of a Red outpost, which turned out to push us out. Dear Dorothy Dix, was I ethically bound to call attention to my blue armband? We got through to Mount Carmel in time to see Blues force Red tanks and infantry to withdraw. Three army sound trucks were playing a recording of battle noises simultaneously. The din was terrific and the Blue commander later told us that he thought Mount Carmel was full of enemy tanks and guns because of the sound track.

The Blues then advanced until there was a dispute between the umpires as to whether the Blues had enough fire superiority to advance. During a truce called by umpires, newsboys and pop salesmen immediately appeared even though the town isn't on most maps.

Fourth Day. Tonight at a crossroad near Mount Carmel somebody suddenly yelled: "A tank's coming." The Blue gun crews sprang to the alert, but instead of popping the tank as soon as they saw it, they waited until it was within a few yards and then let fly with a blank. The tank commander, who probably had a headache from the concussion, sprang out complaining that since he was within 50 yards of the guns he had knocked out the gun crews.

During the argument Red cavalry surprised the Blues. Before the Blues knew what had hit them, the umpires ruled the crossroad out of action. Just then a Red machine gun crew rushed up and a sergeant yelled to the Blues: "You guys get out of the way, you're all either dead, wounded or captured."

Suppose you come over and prove it," a Blue yelled. The Red sergeant started and faced off with a Blue sergeant. What really prevented a fight was that the Blues, while technically out of action, far outnumbered the Reds present.

Fifth Day. Going up to the front today we passed a sad group of Signal Corps men picking up wire rendered useless by the Blue advance. When we passed they still had 20 miles of wire to pick up. We also saw infantry, by now not so chipper, Place leg of lamb, well salted, skin side down on a rack in open pan. Do not add water. Roast in slow oven (300° F.) basting every half hour with French Dressing. If a meat thermometer is used, it should register 175° F. for medium-doneness lamb, 180° F. for well done lamb. Allow 30-35 minutes to the pound.

but marching with great determination. Their faces were black with whiskers and dirt and their eyes were red from lack of sleep and dust. On the roadside the captured crews of 18 Red tanks sat silently on their tanks and watched the Blue infantry pound by. One captured Red officer had a lump on his head from a stone thrown by a Blue. "I'll run over them next time I get into a tank," he said.

Others told about Molotov cocktails, and blanks from 75's at close range. All were bitter about being put out of action, in some cases by wooden guns.

At about 3:30 p.m. this afternoon the war was called off. We drove home, noting that the advance the Blues had made had increased our daily round-trip drive from 180 to 350 miles. First thing we did when we reached the hotel was to celebrate with a bath and our first six-hour sleep in a week.

Looking back on Lana Turner's stages of her rise can be gauged by the men with whom she acted.

she moved on to Jimmy Stewart in Ziegfeld Girl (April 1941).
Next she climbed to Spencer

"Hey, don't take my Carnation away!"

What if I am getting along to my first birthday? I'm all for using Carnation right up to my Lobster Newburg days—and then some!

When my pediatrician picked it to start me on, he knew what he was doing. Look at the set of my shoulders! See that tooth, when I smile! Carnation Milk is irradiated for "sunshine" vitamin D, to help a fellow's teeth and bones. And it's got a soft curd that stomachs without any experience can handle easily.

Besides, I like the taste! I want Carnation, diluted half and half, to drink out of my cup. And my mother likes the price and the convenience. In fact, the whole family's taking my tip and switching over to Carnation.

So—for Pete's sake—don't take that pretty red and white can away! Keep it around—or I'll yell!

No fooling—Baby can have actual recipes using his Carnation Milk! After all, Carnation's only fine whole cow's milk, with part of the natural water removed and all the nourishment left in. Ideal for his cereals and cooked dishes—as well as to drink. Try him with this:

VEGETABLE SOUP

Combine  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup puréed peas or other vegetables with  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup Carnation Milk and  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup water or  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup liquid drained from vegetables. Add a pinch of salt and heat.

FREE! And chock-full of pictures and wisdom! Helpful, interesting, 36-page booklet, "Your Contented Baby." Written by a mother who is also a Registered Nurse. Section of baby recipes and some for older children. Address Carnation Company, Dept. 11, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

LIFE'S PICTURES

Curtis Arnoux Peters, whose professional name is Peter Arno, drew the cartoons which appear in LIFE's Speaking of Pictures this week (see pp. 8-11). He is a tall, debonair, sophisticated son of a distinguished New York family, is extremely serious about his work as America's funniest cartoonist. He is a skilful amateur photographer, often uses camera portraits he has made as models for his cartoons.

The following list, page by page, shows the source from which each picture in this issue was gathered. Where a single page is indebted to several sources credit is recorded picture by picture (left to right, top to bottom), and line by line (lines separated by dashes) unless otherwise specified.

NEW YORK CITY HAS A GREAT BIG WEEK

750,000 BROOKLYNITES HAIL THEIR TRIUMPHANT DODGERS

There was a time when New York City was news capital of the U. S. It was America's social, financial and intellectual nerve center, dominating sister cities by an authority as unmistakable as that which lifts London over Manchester, Paris over Marseilles. Events of the last decade have reduced New York's status. Depression and the New Deal, Franklin D. Roosevelt and war, have combined to make Washington the nation's capital in fact as well as theory. Government, once an unobtrusive roadshow, has now become the No. 1 reality of modern life. But last week New York stole the headlines again. America's biggest ghost town staged a comeback that filled hotels and cash registers as they had not been filled in many a moon. It was like the American Legion convention. It was like the heyday of the World's Fair. It was almost like 1929.

Not one but many factors served to kindle the old-time good-time fever, the old-time flush in the wallet. The Louis-Nova affair brought 56,549 fight fans into the Polo Grounds on Sept. 30. There were Broadway openings and night-club openings. Liquor stores were mobbed for 24 hours before the new Federal excise tax went into effect Oct. 1. Fur coats sold like fury. The 1942 automobile flashed on view. People danced in the street at a movie premiere. Rodeo cowboys and cowgirls yipped around Madison Square Garden.

Football teams warmed up for the season's first big games. And to add to the confusion, 1,000,000 resident New Yorkers, in accordance with a mystic local tradition, moved out of their old apartments into new apartments—all on the same day.

These disorders, however, were mere eddies in the all-encompassing agitation inspired by the victory of the Brooklyn Dodgers in the National League pennant race. When this team paraded through New York City's biggest borough on the afternoon of Sept. 29, time stood still, work ceased, and more than 750,000 Brooklyn fans choked the streets in an earth-shaking, ear-splitting demonstration of pure partisan joy (left).

As the World Series with the American League's Champion Yankees progressed, it became evident that loyalty to the Dodgers is perhaps the most powerful emotion man can experience. It is an emotion that blurs all political, racial and geographical lines. In Iceland where U. S. forces are stationed, Dodger fans hung over radio sets. In Moscow, according to an A. P. dispatch, the Three Power War Supply Conference was plunged in gloom by news of the initial Dodgers defeat. In New York Dodger fans from all parts of the world paid up to $50 for single seats. For pictures of the World Series and of New York in the throes of its sporting, spending week, turn the page.

NEW YORK WEEK: WORLD SERIES

The biggest drawing-card in New York's big week was the World Series, No. 1 U. S. sports event. This year, after a breathless home-stretch drive that cinched the National League pennant only three days before the season ended, the Brooklyn Dodgers slashed their way into their first Series contest since 1920. They went up against the New York Yankees, consistent wonder team of modern baseball, winner of eleven American League flags and eight World Series championships in those 21 years. New York City got a "subway Series." By subway from Rockefeller Center it is 25 minutes to Yankee Stadium, 35 minutes to the Dodgers' Ebbets Field. Fare 5¢.

For the opening game of the Series at the Stadium, 68,540 fans from all over the country paid $265,400 to see the Yankees win, 3-2. Crowds which grew to 99,000 lined up for the 28,000 available bleacher seats. Next day the Dodgers evened the count in games with the score again 3-2, in their favor. Early Wednesday night crowds gathered outside Ebbets

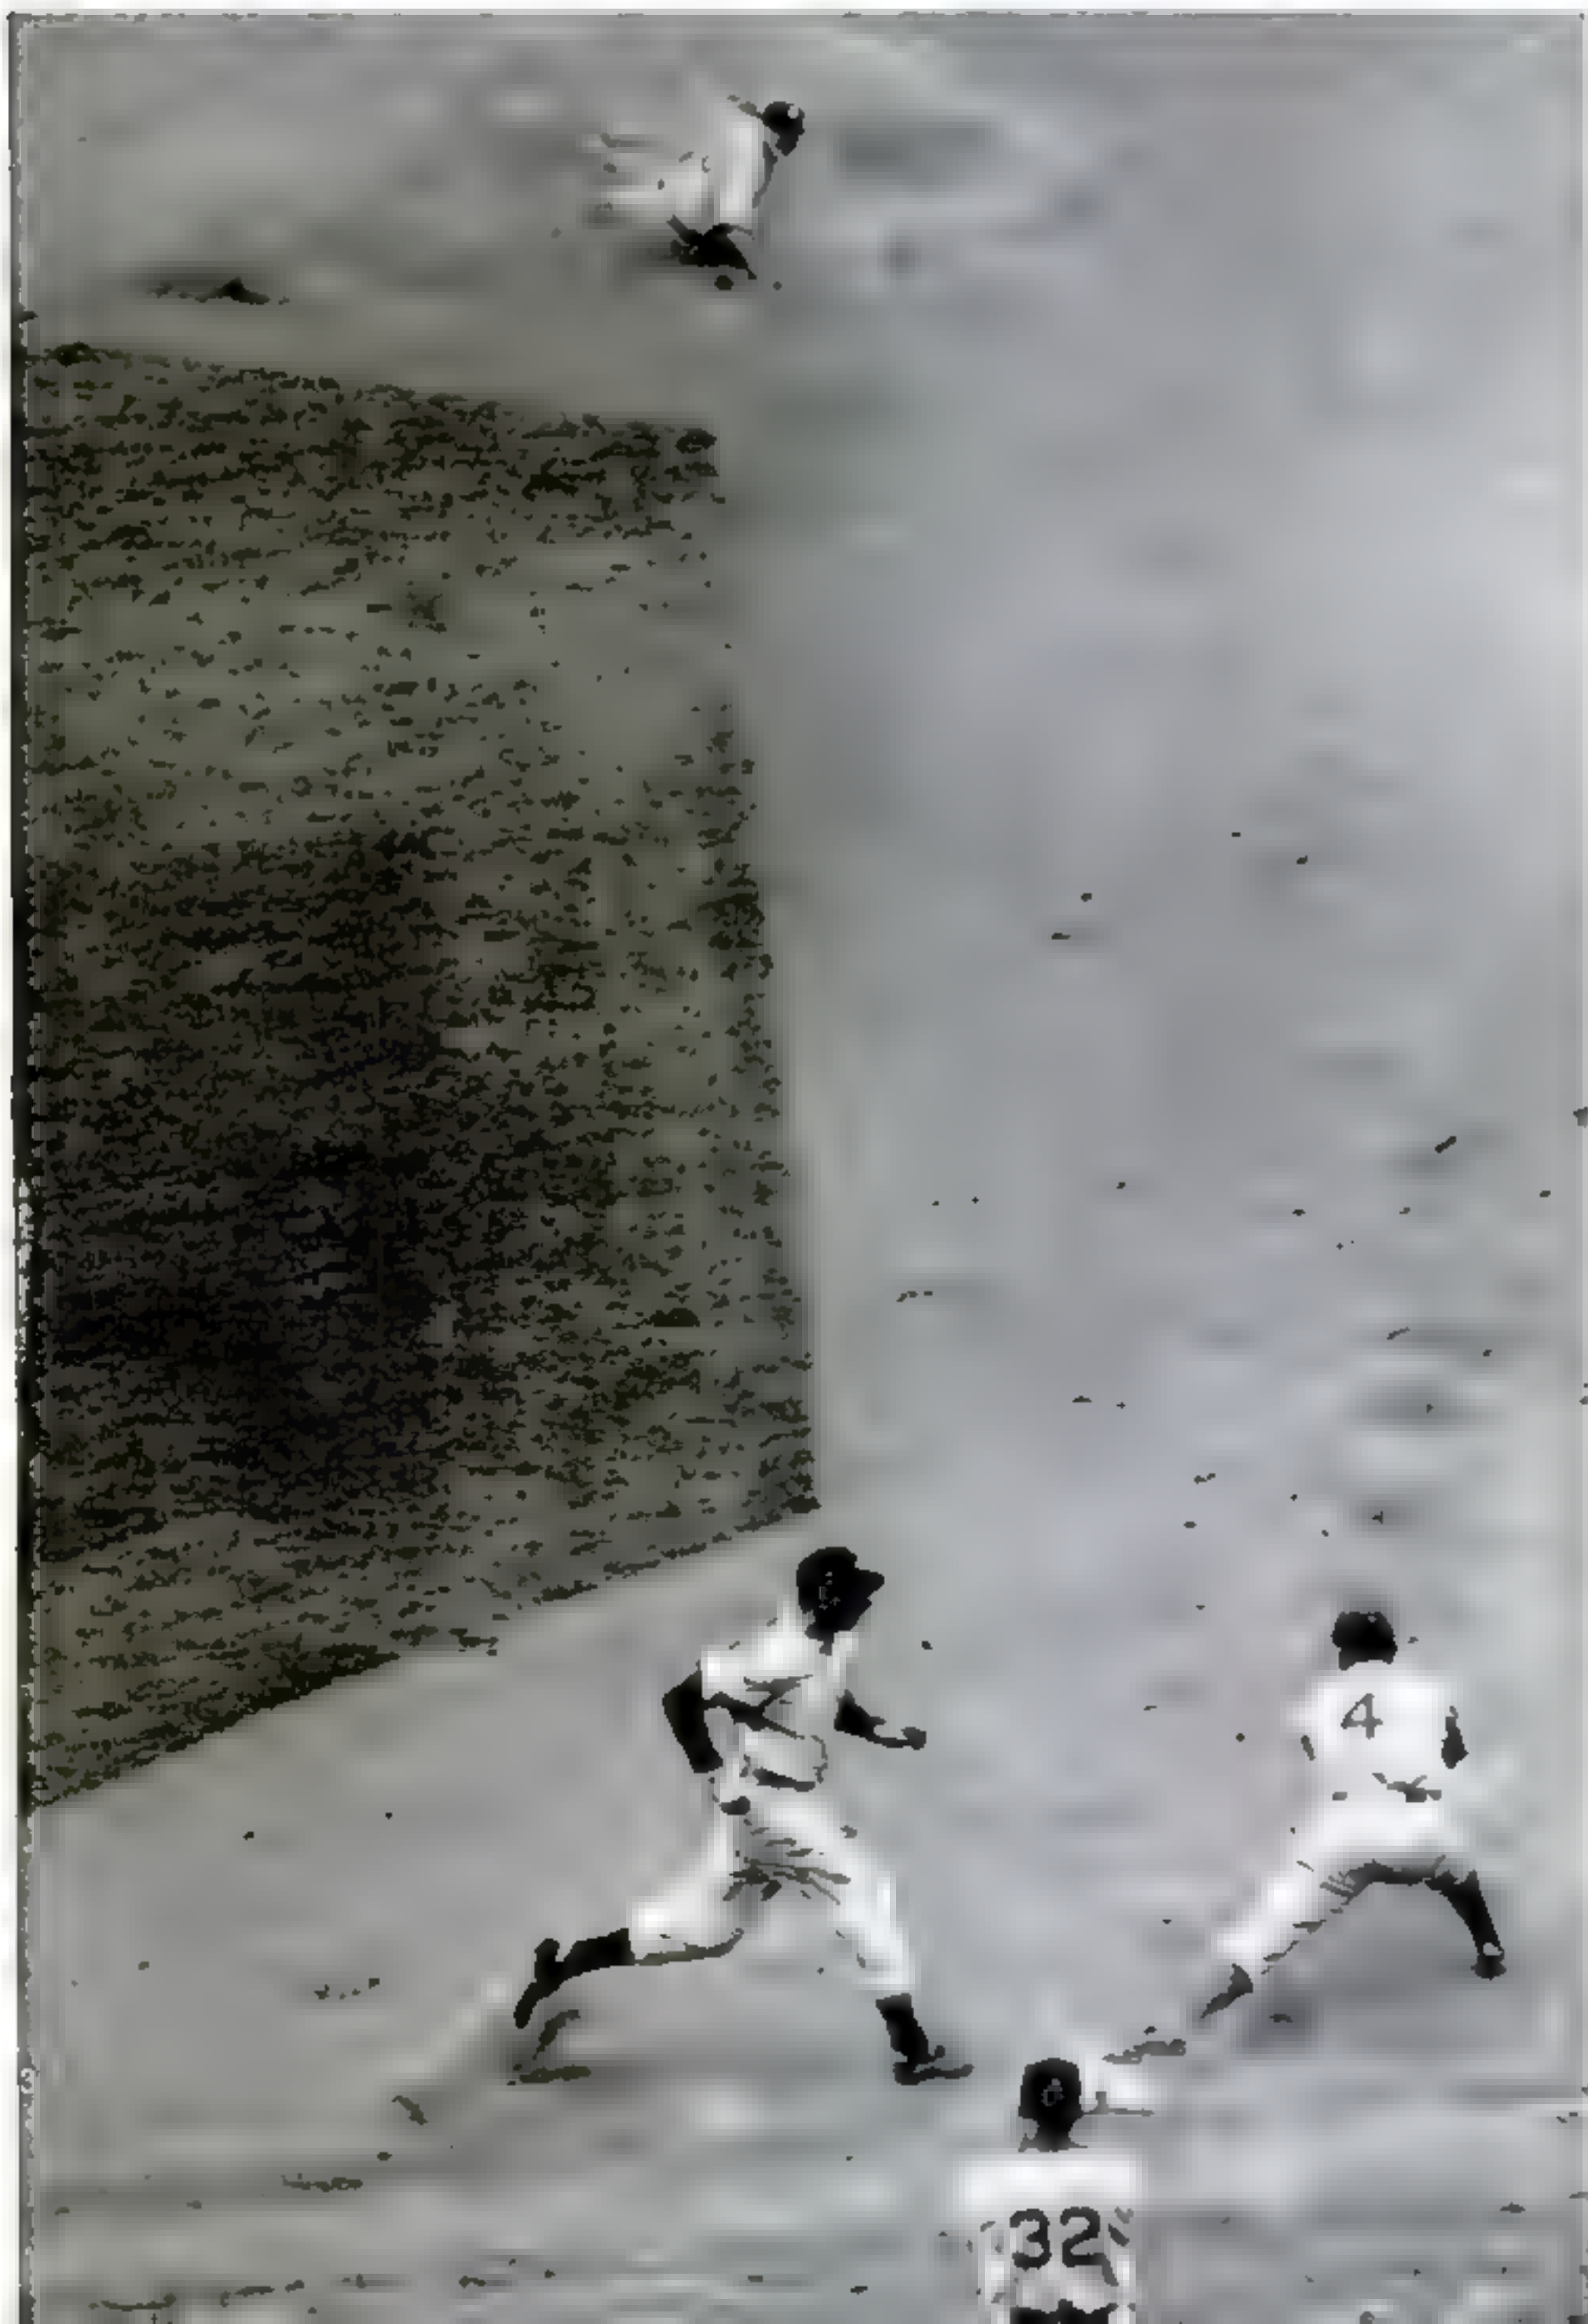

Field for Friday's game which finally took place Saturday. Their line held virtually intact through Friday's heavy rainstorm. But Brooklynites were crushed to find it headed by a man from Washington, D. C. The Yankees won the third game, 2-1.

The great DiMaggio went hitless in seven official trips to the plate in the first two games. Brooklyn fans wore big celluloid badges and funny hats, carried every conceivable kind of noisemaker. One came dressed in a tuxedo. They were wild and rowdy. The confident, conservative Yankees, in whose ball park such spectator antics are uncommon, soon found that they were up against a wild and rowdy baseball team as well. For some of the roughness, see the magic-eye camera sequences below and on opposite page.

The contrasting personalities of the two teams seemed to be typified in the personalities of two men on each side. The Yanks had calm, benevolent President Louis Barrow and able, impassive Manager Joe McCarthy; the Dodgers brassy, hustling Larry McPhail and Leo Durocher. Translated from sports to the realm of politics, the 1941 World Series might have been likened to a fierce Presidential election campaign between Herbert Hoover and the late Huey P. Long.

DiMaggio is out at first in this remarkable picture of a Dodger double play in second game. First Baseman Canulli is receiving ball as Henrich, who tried to slide into second, has already been forced out by Second Baseman Herman.

NEW YORK WEEK:

NOVA-LOUIS FIGHT

Most disappointing event of New York's boom week took place Monday night at the Polo Grounds when 50,500 shivering people sat through a fight between Heavyweight Champion Joe Louis (202½ lb.) and a 25-year-old Californian named Lou Nova (202½ lb.). Nova, famous chiefly because he is an exponent of "Yogi," and had promised to unveil a secret "cosmic punch," had already been trounced by Tony Galento.

Although the radio description and many sports columns tried to make the fight sound good, spectators remarked that it was probably the least interesting of Louis' 19 defenses of his heavyweight title since he became champion in June 1937. After measuring Nova carefully through the first five rounds Louis suddenly unleashed a terrific right hand punch the hardest of his career, he said later—to knock the challenger flat. After Nova got up, Louis smashed his bloody face mercilessly until the referee stopped the fight. Time: 2 min., 59 sec. of the sixth round. Louis collected $193,274 as his share of the gate. Louis' present draft category is 1A. He may quit boxing, as undefeated champion, to go into the Army.

NIGHT LIFE

No one went to bed early in New York last week. No one felt sleepy. The night of the fight, the night before the Series opener, the night after the Series opener, it seemed imperative to thousands of fans, both homegrown and imported, to unwind jangled nerves at the city's multitudinous night clubs and bars. And on Friday evening, after a rainy and gameless day, night life seemed the remedy for ennui.

There never has been any question—even during depression's nadir—of New York's ability to meet its residents' nocturnal needs. Several night clubs timed their seasonal openings to coincide with the siege of sports. The Waldorf-Astoria unveiled a redesigned supper room. Two Broadway shows—one produced by George Abbott (see p. 51), the other by George S. Kaufman—held glittering premieres. A Greenwich Village hot spot announced a new cocktail, created in honor of the Dodgers, and called the "Bum's Rush."

Throughout the week visiting celebrities from Washington, Hollywood and lesser communities cluttered lobbies and barrooms, in white ties and black ties, before and long after midnight. There was no limit to the geographical diversity of the city's temporary population. There seemed no limit to its energies or its spending. The big money had come back to New York. And New York was taking it in.

SIX DEEP, SEVEN DEEP, NEW YORKERS JAM A RETAIL LIQUOR STORE ON SEPT. 30 IN A SCRAMBLE TO BEAT THE NEW FEDERAL EXCISE TAX TAKING EFFECT THE FOLLOWING DAY

BUYING AND MOVING RUSH

New Yorkers do things in a big way and, often as not, with a kind of herd-like unanimity. Thus on Sept. 30, one day before imposition of a new Federal excise tax of 10% on certain commodities, New Yorkers rushed to the stores and bought $1,000,000 worth of liquor and countless thousands of dollars worth of other goods, cheap and fancy. Simultaneously 1,000,000 other New Yorkers moved out of the apartments in which they lived into new apartments.

The tradition that New Yorkers must move only on Oct. 1 is a badly notion maintained for the convenience of local realtors. The impulse that sent New Yorkers scrambling to the stores was real and contagious. All merchandise departments profited. Even tax-free items vanished in the stampede. "Business," exclaimed one store manager, "is terrific."

LIFE ON THE NEWSFRONTS OF THE WORLD

The isolationists lose ground as neutrality repeal is pressed and another U. S. ship is sunk

One of the head men among American isolationists, General Robert E. Wood of the America First Committee, dashed into Washington last week to contrive some way to block any weakening of the Neutrality Act. Setting himself up in Senator Wheeler's offices, he summoned Congressmen to see him. But some men whom he expected to come, stayed away. Those who did come reported glumly that neutrality repeal would win. Congressional isolationists, listening to reports from back home, were losing their isolationist vim.

What small chance the General had of blocking neutrality repeal seemed smaller at week's end. In the South Atlantic, only 400 miles from Brazil, the survivors of a torpedoed tanker were rescued. The ship was the I. C. White, owned by Standard Oil of New Jersey, flying the Panama flag, assigned to England under lease-lend. It was the eighth sinking of an American-owned ship. As the incidents were mounting, the isolationist sentiment of the country was from Charles Lindbergh. Silent since his attack on the Jews, the flier now declared that he and all isolationists were being persecuted—smeared, shut up, intimidated. "If the time comes," he said, "when we can no longer meet face to face as free men in a free country, we will meet together at the elections next year. But what if there are no elections next year? There is still, deep within this country, the spirit that built America, and on that, in the last analysis, we must rely." Lindbergh did not specify what the "spirit" was. But some people recalled that at least once before the ex-eagle had hinted at revolution as a means to enforce his aims.

Roosevelt, Stalin and God. President Roosevelt sought last week to stem the tide of opposition among many religious Americans, especially Catholics, to helping "godless Russia." Citing the fact that Polish legions fighting for Russia have their own priests, churches and synagogues, the President pointed out that the Soviet Constitution guarantees "freedom of religion . . . essentially what is the rule in this country." Mr. Roosevelt overstated the case. The true extent of Russian religious freedom is revealed in LIFE's essay (pp. 110-121), photographed and prepared before his remarks.

Led by Monsignor Fulton J. Sheen of New York, U. S. Catholics took sharp issue with the President's talk, only to be mollified by his next move. Recognizing that religious freedom in Russia is something less than complete, Mr. Roosevelt announced that his lease-lend envoy to Moscow, Averell Harriman, was taking the matter up with Stalin. One ray of promise was the news that the newspaper Bezbozhnik, organ of the League of the Militant Godless, had quietly ceased publication "because of the paper shortage."

Death By The Carload. There were 1,000 fewer people alive in German-occupied Europe last week. The Nazis had executed them by hanging and shooting for sabotage, espionage, assassination and, according to the Germans, for planning to revolt. "In some cases [the Germans are] shooting them by the carloads." The phrase was not extravagant; the Berlin censor passed it with his blessing.

Not since the war began had such a forest fire of anti-German hatred and violence spread across Europe. By the end of the week, the minimum-known box score read:

Czechs: 141 killed, 720 arrested
Yugoslavs: more than 60 killed
Poles: 15 killed, 300 arrested
Frenchmen: two killed, 44 arrested
Belgians: more than 15 arrested
Dutch: five killed

Even in Germany's pet satellites, Bulgaria, Hungary and Slovakia, all was not well. In one Bulgarian seaport 522 people were arrested. In Budapest 18 persons were jailed for high treason and espionage, while in little Slovakia two workers were sentenced to prison for spreading Red propaganda.

In Bohemia-Moravia, where Reinhard Heydrich—one of Himmler's chief assistants in the dreaded Gestapo—recently replaced Baron von Neurath as Protector, the flames of hatred flared even higher. General Alois Elias, whom the Germans themselves had previously approved for the post of puppet premier, was sentenced to death.

HEYDRICH

Hitler Speaks. Last week on the 104th day of the Russian war Adolf Hitler addressed 20,000 of his faithful in Berlin's Sportpalast. For his speech he had cooked up a bubbling brew of truths, half-truths, quarter-truths and lies.

Russia, the German warlord said confidently, "is already broken." "Everything" in the Eastern campaign "has proceeded according to plan." Then three breaths later he admitted having made the greatest blunder that a military leader can make: "We had no idea," said Hitler, "how gigantic the preparations of this enemy were. . . ."

The speech contained several significant omissions. He painted a gruesome picture of Communism, but never mentioned his ex-ally Stalin by name, showing once again perhaps that he secretly respects the ability of the Russian dictator. Although he mentioned the possibility of a "longer" war, he set no deadline for final victory and his original 1939 prophecy that this war would determine the history of the next "thousand years" was last week reduced to a mere "hundred."

PICTURE OF THE WEEK

It was a big day for the Seattle-Tacoma Shipbuilding Co. yards when Miss Barbara Funston launched the Army transport Frederick Funston, named for her famous father. The day was a great day for all U. S. shipyards and it climaxed a great shipyard week. During the week a 55,000-ton battleship, five destroyers and three minesweepers were launched for the Navy. And on the week's last day, called "Liberty Fleet Day," 14 new merchant ships splashed into the waters of the Atlantic, Pacific and Gulf of Mexico. It was the greatest single day's launching since the last World War. But it was only a beginning. By the end of next year, 1,200 merchant ships totaling 12,500,000 tons are scheduled for U. S. launching.

CORDELL HULL AND BIRTHDAY CAKE

dropping. The Gallup Poll now found 82% of America in favor of Roosevelt's shoot-at-sight order.

President Roosevelt twice summoned Cordell Hull to the White House to talk over neutrality changes. They talked so long that the President's appointment schedule went all awry. The 70-year-old Secretary of State found time, however, to receive a birthday cake from the press. It was decorated with 21 candles. The old Tennessee statesman blew out the candles, not with one big gust of breath but with seven carefully aimed puffs.

Meanwhile some important people were talking as if America were not only at war already but had won a victory. Secretary of Navy Frank Knox warned the U. S. and Britain would have to pool their post-war resources for 100 years to police the world. Supreme Court Justice Jackson declared that the U. S. would have the post-war choice of co-operating in keeping lawful world order or of outstripping the whole world in arms.

But the week's most extraordinary speech came

GREAT CONGRESS OF INTELLECT HERALDS CHICAGO'S 50TH YEAR

At the University of Chicago on Sept. 29 there gathered the greatest concentration of intellectual power that the world has seen since the 1836 celebration of the Tercentenary of Harvard University. Chicago's congress of learning marked no such hoary eminence. In celebrating a mere 50th anniversary, it heralded Chicago as the youngest world university. Appropriately, for doctoral honors, Chicago picked 35 frontiersmen in science and letters whose names are as young in fame as the University itself, most of them unknown to the public.

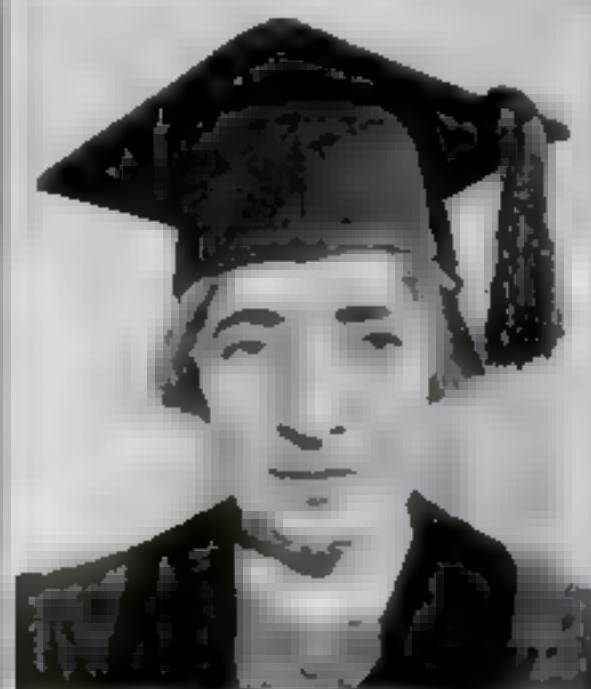

Of the 34 shown here, all but three Europeans—one an ex-foreign minister, one a British economist and one a refugee scholar of international law—are citizens of the Western Hemisphere. Their brains and hands are devoted to the self-rewarding search for truth beyond the horizon. Not for years will the full impact of their labors be felt. Their papers, monographs and books reach into the profundities of atoms, Shakespeare's heroes, hormones, papyri, law, glaciers, insulin, Hitler literature, cosmic rays, sex and viruses, embracing the whole front of man's knowledge of himself, his history and his world.

Academic procession leaves Rockefeller Memorial chapel after 50th anniversary convocation for award of honorary doctorates. Unique for the intense scholastic morale of its students, Chicago is famed for its philosophy, sociology and scientific faculties. Missing from the roster of degree holders shown here is French scholar Edouard C. Armstrong of Princeton University.

MIDDLE EAST ROUTES FOR BRITISH-AMERICAN AID TO SOVIET RUSSIA WALLOW THROUGH TANGLED GORGES AND OVER MOUNTAINS HIGHER THAN U. S. ROCKIES

TREASURES OF CAUCASUS HITLER COVETS THE RUSSIAN MANGANESE AND OIL HIDDEN BEHIND AN IMPENETRABLE MOUNTAIN WALL

The dark shadow sweeping eastward across Russia like the coming of night approaches a priceless valley, defended by a formidable mountain wall. Two of this war's greatest treasures are the oil and manganese hidden south of the line of the Caucasus Mountains—oil to run the engines of war, manganese to harden the steel of war. Hitler wants them both badly. To get them he must either storm the high Caucasus or make a flank attack by sea or by air, after he has conquered the Crimea and the Sea of Azov. The British commander in India, General Wavell, said last week, "They [the Germans] would have to put an end to the Russian Black Sea Fleet, either by taking all its bases or by sending in the Italian Fleet to fight. The latter would involve seizing the Dardanelles."

For control of the Black Sea is also indispensable to get German supply ships across from the mouth of the Danube and up the Dnepr and Don Rivers. The big catch in the German conquest of southern and central Russia is a painful supply problem overland. Water transport would largely solve it. Hence, the most useful spot in the world today for British and U. S. bombers and fighters is probably the Caucasus. One whole wing of the Royal Air Force, with a probable combat strength of about 50 fighters, has already been rushed up into the Caucasus and beyond.

The picture map above shows by heavy arrows southward how the Germans will attack and by lighter arrows northward how U. S. and British re-inforcements can reach Russia this way. The brutal difficulty of the possible routes can only be shown on such a terrain map. Since Syria, Iraq and Iran have in one way or another joined the anti-Nazi front, this is where the U. S. S. R. and Britain may be said to join frontiers. British and U. S. arms now trickle up the Persian Gulf to the port of Basra. Indicated are the fairly good highway via Baghdad, Hamadan, Kazvin and Tabriz, and the one-track railway from Bandar Shapur through Teheran to the Caspian. Caspian lighters, totaling one-third of Russia's tonnage, would transport the arms to Baku. The route from Egypt by Syria and Turkey becomes a reality only if and when Turkey becomes a fighting British ally.

German barges and parachutists may take off from Rhodes, Crete and the Crimea. The decisive battle may take place somewhere near Mount Ararat, or even near Megiddo, where was fought the first Armageddon, hard by the isthmus of Suez. The first sign of that will be German troops lapping at the northern flanks of the Caucasus. For what the conquest of Russia has so far cost the U. S. S. R., turn to page 47.

RESOURCES OF THE U. S. S. R. THE BLACK SHADOW OF NAZI CONQUEST HAS NOT YET TOUCHED MOST OF THE U. S. S. R.'S RICHES

How long Russia can fight is answered for anybody who will study this map. Already practically lost may be considered the Ukraine and Leningrad. Most important is Germany's conquest of 45% of Russia's manganese at Nikopol in the Ukraine. When the Germans get the Donets Basin, they will then have 60% of Russia's pig iron, 50% of its coal, 40% of its aluminum, 20% of its machinery, not to speak of 20% of its people. But it must be remembered that as Germany conquers Russia and both armies are further whittled down, Russia needs less and less in the way of resources. And very little of what Nazi Germany has conquered will be of any use to Hitler for at least a year to come.

The great question mark about Soviet Russia's continuing resistance is to what extent production has been built up in the Ural area, in the last five years of preparation for alternative wars against Germany or Japan. Foreign observers, totally ignorant of the real facts behind the curtain of Soviet censorship, have consistently underestimated the answer. The probabilities are that Russia can at least supply an old-fashioned horde army, plus some mechanized striking units, some aviation, from this Ural area.

SUPPLIES IN SIBERIA

MILITARY DEPOTS STUDD SOVIET HINTERLAND

The vast sprawl of the entire U. S. S. R. is shown on the map at the bottom of this page. The Trans-Siberian Railway, now being double-tracked, could well be broken by Japanese sabotage or bombing in the mountainous Lake Baikal region, where it crawls through nearly 50 tunnels. Over this railway roll U. S. supplies that have so far put in at Vladivostok, passing under the nose of the indignant Japanese. Should Japan make trouble, Russian bombers in the Far East could well bomb Tokyo. Russian Asiatic submarines could raid the Japanese Fleet. These far-flung Russian garrisons now get their food supplies from the Siberian agricultural developments that the U. S. S. R. is so proud of.

Spotted across the map of the U. S. S. R. are the great military depots where for many years the Russian Army has built up reserves of munitions and supplies. They are Sverdlovsk, Chelyabinsk, Omsk, Novosibirsk, Krasnoyarsk and Irkutsk. If the worst comes to the very worst, the Red Army may fight back across Siberia from base to base. Notice the two other ways that British and U. S. supplies can reach Russia: from the south across the Caucasus and the Caspian, and from the north to Archangel across the Arctic Sea, frozen six months of the year.

The war will change character abruptly when and if the Germans take Moscow. The Map shows that this will break the north-south railway and isolate the separate fronts: north, central and south. That is why the Russians have put their greatest strength, as shown on the maps on the following pages, on this central front, to hold Moscow as long as possible. The facts of the campaign so far bear no relation whatever to Adolf Hitler's statement on Oct. 3 that he had smashed Communist Russia utterly and forever. This was evidently one more use by Hitler of his favorite political technique of throwing out the most gigantic lie he can invent to confound his enemies. As usual, it had a good effect inside Germany and possibly some effect on the rest of the world.

The job of pure organization in retreat is Stalin's chief job. As factories fall to the Germans, unexpected new shortages develop all over his vast economic empire. To anticipate and forestall these mounting economic tragedies is an almost insuperable problem.

But of all this, what Hitler wants most is unquestionably the manganese and oil concealed in the long narrow valley behind the Caucasus Mountains (see map on p. 47). There is only one real road through the Caucasus, the so-called Georgian Military Road over the Krestovy Pass. The mountains tower close against the Black Sea, so that it is easy for a defender to hold the shore-line passes.

The curse of this land is that men have fought over it since the beginning of recorded time. All the tyrants and their hordes watered it with all the bloods of Asia. Here the legendary Prometheus was thought to have lain bound. Here came the Greek Argonauts to find the Golden Fleece. Here fought the conquering Khazars, the Huns and Avars, the Mongols of Genghis Khan, the Varangian pirates, the Turks and the Persians. Some of them fought westward to settle Europe. Some fell exhausted in the precipitate valleys to form the myriad races of the Caucasus. Until the 18th Century the savage and warlike Georgians of the Caucasus fought off the Great Russians of Muscovy. Then at last Peter the Great captured the Caspian end of the mountain chain, only to lose it again. In 1788 the Georgians put themselves under Russia's protection, but dissenting tribes were bloodily harried by the Russians. Today a Georgian rules All The Russians.

Siberia is held together by the double-tracked Trans-Siberian Railway. Facing Japan are the strong Soviet Far Eastern divisions, with their own factories to supply much of their own munitions. Siberian cities noted are military depots of munitions.

FIVE BRITISH BOMBS ZOOM DOWN ON THE KNAPSACK POWER PLANT AS BOMBER PASSES LOW OVER THE OCTAGONAL "COOLERS" AND TWO TALL SMOKESTACKS IN FOREGROUND

I BOMB GERMANY BY DAYLIGHT

One of the single most spectacular R. A. F. mass daylight raids on Germany was during the attack on the great Knapsack power station on the morning of Aug. 12. Located eight miles north of Cologne, this station provides power for some of the largest cities and industries in the Ruhr. The Knapsack raid was carried out by 54 Bieenheim bombers arriving over their target in waves. Forty-two returned. The first-person account of the raid which appears at right was written for LIFE by the Irish-born leader of one of the British squadrons. In keeping with R. A. F. policy, the name of the squadron leader remains anonymous.

We knew something big was in the air because we'd laid off operations for several days, which is always a sure sign. The tops were also talking a lot about it. We rather guessed it would be a daylight job on some interior German target. It was, but even worse than we'd thought—the kind of suicidal business nobody particularly likes.

We assembled in the crew room on Tuesday morning for briefing. Our job, the Group Captain explained, was to smash up the power station at Knapsack, above Cologne and 15 miles inside enemy territory, and put it out of action. We were to make the whole trip at low level and go over the target low as possible. Our bomb fuses were timed. Low level means ten to 20 ft. above the ground and a delayed fuse usually gives you just time to get away before the bomb explodes. And if you are flying in tight formation, you're likely as not to get the full blast from bombs dropped by a plane in front. It wasn't exactly what you'd call a cushy job, but in our show you don't pick and choose. You just carry on. "Thirty-six planes will make the trip from here," the G. C. said, "and some of you ought to get through." He warned us not to plot our course on our maps because if one of us were shot down in Holland, it would give the whole show away before we even got there.

We took off at 9:15, flying in vics of three joined into boxes of six. I was leading the second formation of 14 planes. It was a sunny morning with practically no haze or clouds. As we crossed the coast we were joined by our escort of Whirlwinds which was to accompany us across the North Sea and into Holland.

We flew along a few feet above the water—just missing the whitecaps. It's hard for ground observers to see a plane coming in practically at water level. A lot of wisecracking went on through the intercom phones. "Getting your ruddy wing in the water," my observer kept shouting, and one of the other pilots swore he'd caught a fish in his propeller. I might add that one of the chaps did have two seagulls in his engines when he got back. The Dutch will probably be saying, "Two of our seagulls failed to return."

We crossed the Dutch coast north of Antwerp and went hedgehopping across Holland, dodging trees, telegraph poles and houses. One chap did hit a high-tension wire and crashed. Damned bad show. But aside from the danger of hitting things, low-level flying isn't as bad as it sounds. You are safe from anti-aircraft and also from fighters because they can't dive on you without hitting the ground themselves and they can't get under you. The only thing they can do is to come up behind or the side and there you are more than a match for them with your turret guns. Of course, there is machine-gunning from the ground but when you're travelling 250 miles an hour it's pretty hard for a gunner to get you in his sights.

People in the fields waved farm implements and hats as we went over. In one village square we saw four policemen, standing together with bicycles, who solemnly saluted us. They were dressed in blue

Dear Ma: This is ME— in a PULLMAN!

1. Well, Ma . . . here I am taking my first trip in a Pullman. And every time I take one of my lazy six-foot stretches I sure am glad I'm riding by Pullman. Riding most ways is just riding. But riding by Pullman is living! And the service, Ma—just look at all I get on a Pullman . . .

2. Take the porter . . . He calls me "sir" and treats me like a king. (I bet he thinks I'm much older than 19.) He takes my bags and shows me my berth. He makes my bed. He shines my shoes. He brushes my clothes. He brings extra blankets, extra pillows, even a drink of water at the press of a button! And, last thing at night, he asks what time I want to be called in the morning! (Gosh!)

3. And the bed, Ma! With two pillows, and fresh, snugly sheets, and a nice soft, comfortable mattress, like the kind we have at home. All mine, Ma! Plenty of room to stretch and turn. Class, Ma? Listen! Two bed lamps, coat hangers, a little hammock to put my clothes in. And even a private air cooler in my berth! (What won't they think of next!)

4. I saw a big league pitcher in the lounge! We got acquainted, talked baseball to bedtime. (Gee, you meet nice people in a lounge car.) The lounge car, you know, is just like a private club for everybody with a Pullman ticket. It's a friendly place, with big, lazy chairs, free magazines to read, and a porter ready to jump the minute you clap your hands!

5. A washroom you can swing a cat in! You might think, Ma, that a washroom in a Pullman is a hole-in-the-wall affair. But it isn't. It's big and roomy, with hot and cold running water, and a special bowl with a goose-neck faucet for cleaning my teeth. It even has an outlet for my electric razor. And Ma, you can use a million towels if you want! (It's wonderful!)

6. And what do you think it cost? Only $2.65 to ride Pullman the whole 300 miles; plus my first class railroad ticket. And this'll please you, Ma. It's the safest way to travel there is. So it's Pullman for my money. For you, too, Ma. From now on we travel in style!

"Just missing the whitecaps," the Blenheim bombers cross the North Sea in "vic" of three a few feet above the waves. They fly at this low altitude and hedge-hop their way across Holland to make it more difficult for the Germans to observe their approach.

uniforms and high helmets, and looked just like English bobbies. A group of children standing on a pillbox jumped up and down and waved as we passed over.

We weren't exactly sure when we crossed the German frontier because the country is much the same except that Germany seems to have more trees than Holland. But we soon saw people running and diving for cover, and knew we were over enemy territory. The gunners opened up with everything they had . . . [censored]. Some of the Germans apparently took us for their own aircraft returning from a raid and began to wave—until they heard our guns going and saw tracer bullets coming at them. The air was full of Blenheims. Once a squadron flew right over us on its way to another power station near Aachen. It only cleared us by a few feet. We were bunched so close together that some of the chaps were having trouble with the slipstream from planes in front. So I told them to loosen up the formation. We had no trouble finding our way to the target as the navigator in the first flight was sticking tight to the course and we needed only to follow him.

I heard my observer shouting, "There she is, skipper," and off to the right were the spires of Cologne Cathedral, which was a sort of landmark because we knew that the power station was about eight miles above the city. Then we saw the target sticking out a mile. It looked exactly like our photographs had shown it with two sets of tall chimneys about 150 yards apart. Our job was to go in between the chimneys and unload our bombs on the main plant. The leader of the formation banked for a wide turn. The sun was to our port bow.

Up to then we had not encountered a single hostile plane or flak battery, although some of the chaps claimed that over Holland they'd seen some tracer bullets passing them. We'd evidently taken the Jerries by surprise because our Wellingtons had been over the same territory all night and I don't suppose they were counting on another raid so soon. They were probably sleeping or cleaning their guns. I was banking to go in over the target when my rear gunner shouted.

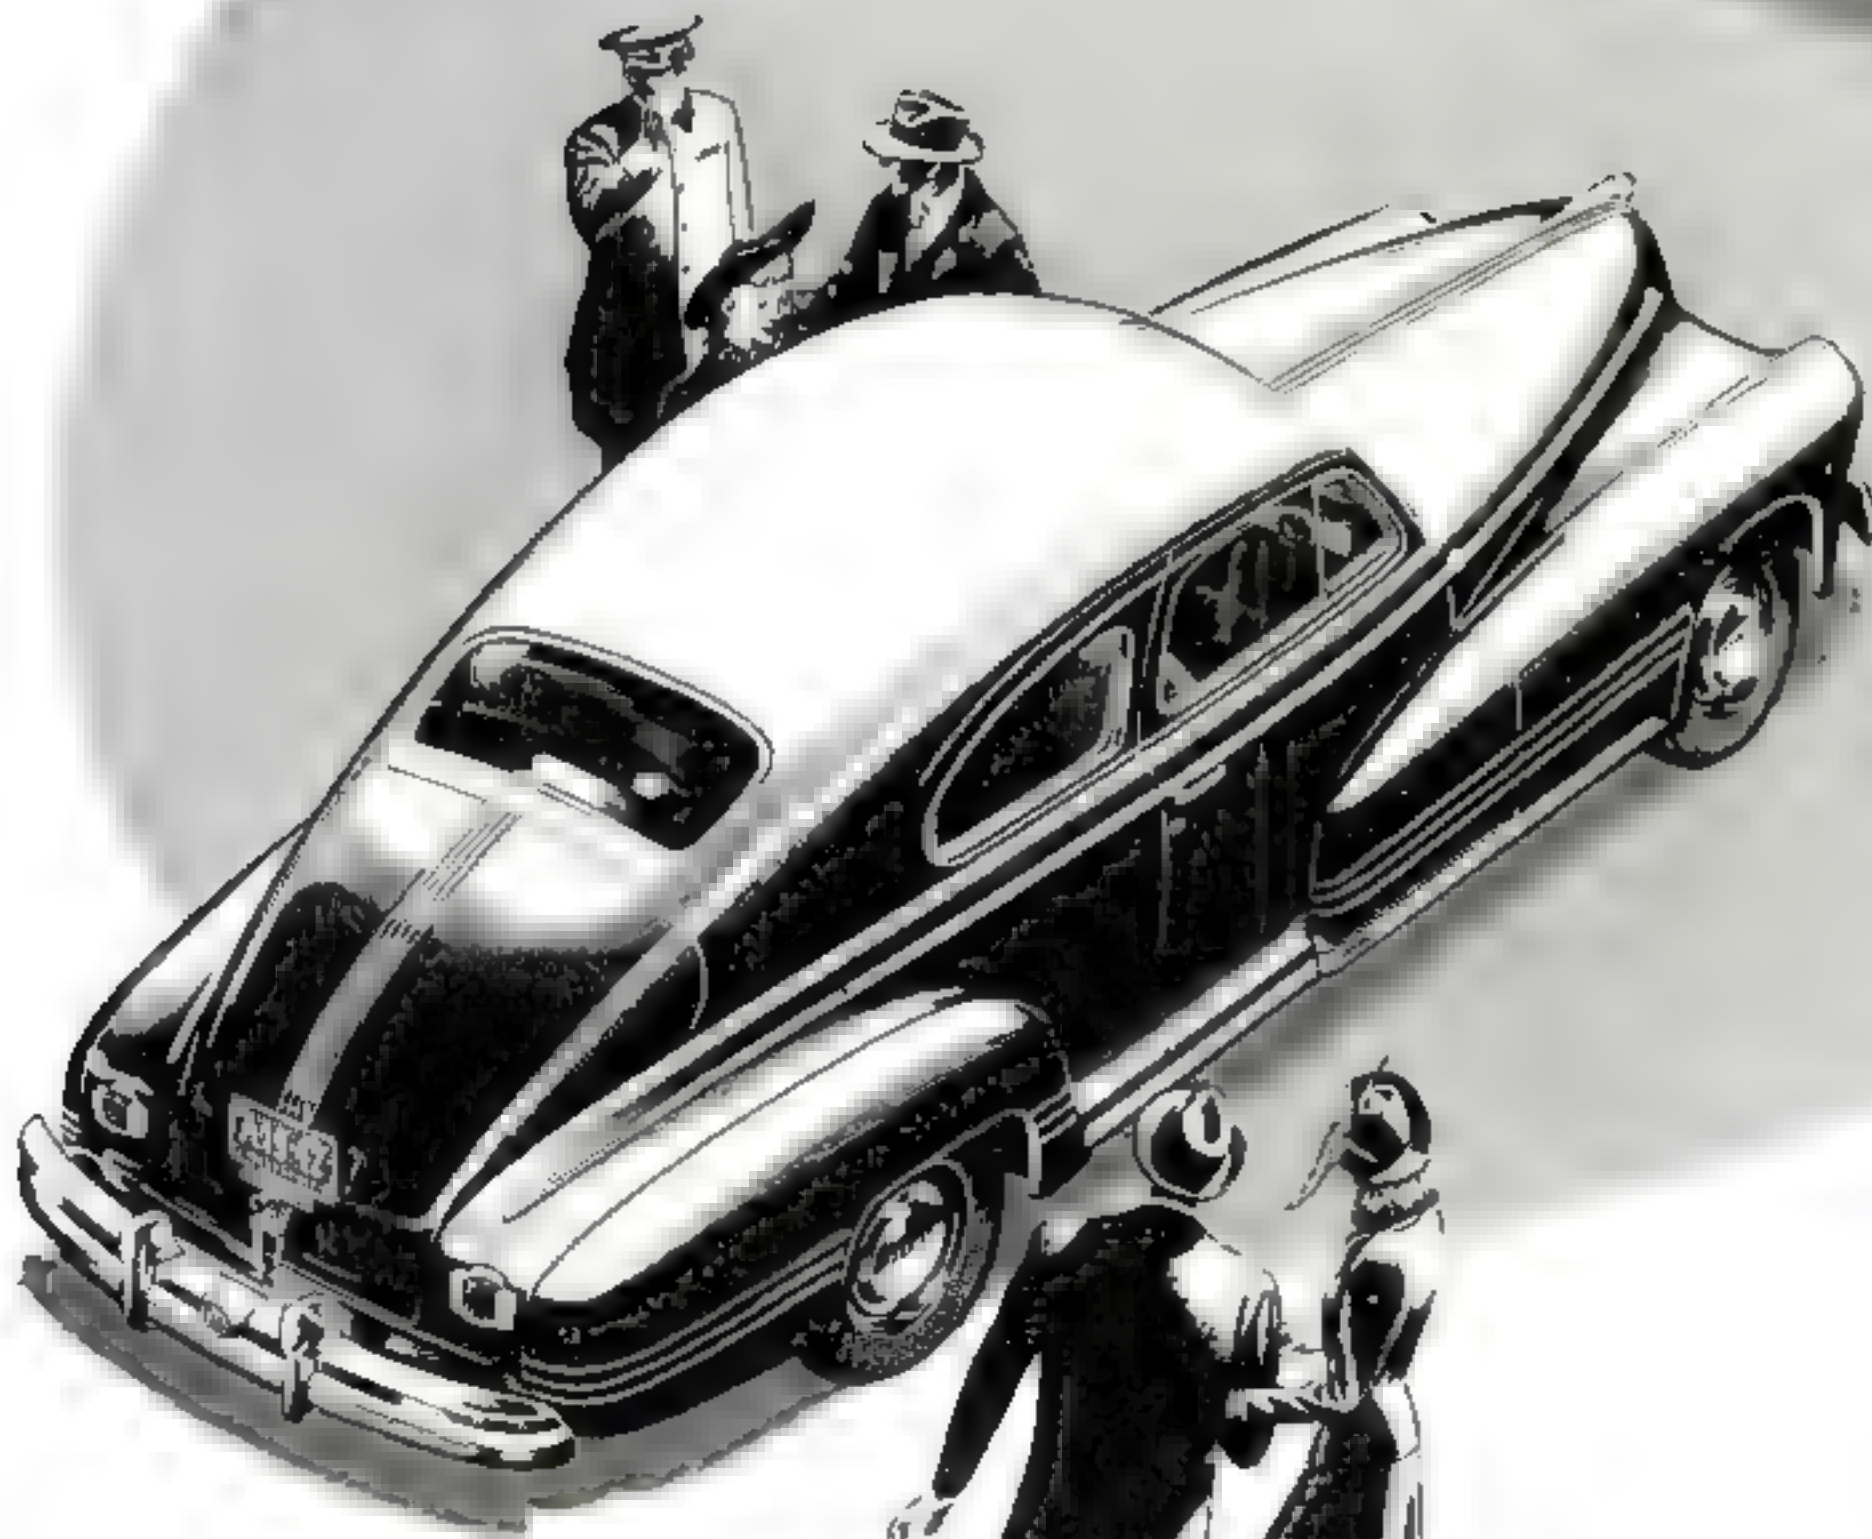

The R. A. F.'s target is the sprawling Knapsack power plant. The white smoke at the far left and right is probably from bomb hits. The Fortuna power station, which also services the industries of Cologne, was raided simultaneously with the target above.

PERHAPS YOU, too, are one of the thousands who thought that last year's Pontiac could not be improved. If that is the case, you're due to change your mind when you see the new 1942 Pontiacs.

You'll be instantly impressed with their new beauty. Length and weight have been increased—without sacrifice of Pontiac's famous economy. While fifteen major improvements provide even greater comfort, safety and handling ease.

But of greater importance is the fact that Pontiac's traditional quality has been even further augmented. All vital mechanical parts—bearings, pistons, connecting rods and others—are exactly the same as those that have made so many happy Pontiac owners in the past.

Yet, even though they are bigger and better through and through, the 1942 Pontiacs are still priced only a few dollars above the lowest!

"Tally ho! Fighters to port." Two Me 109's were coming at us from the side. I told the flight to take evasive action, which means sawing up and down and taking skidding turns. I could see cannon shells coming between me and the next plane and watched them rip chunks out of its wing fabric. The flak was also becoming intense and was bursting all around us. The Jerries were apparently firing point-blank at us. I could see flashes from a gun emplacement and was wondering what to do about it when one of the chaps went straight for it with all three of his front guns going. He silenced it.

I saw the leader of the first flight going in over the target so low that he was right down between the chimneys and in the smoke and steam that were coming from the plant. I realized that we would have to get some altitude, otherwise we'd run smack into his explosions, and signalled my group to climb to 800 ft. As we went over the target I saw red flashes inside the buildings from bombs dropped by planes in front of us. We planted ours just where we wanted them. Clouds of black smoke were rolling up from the plant and fires were starting.

Flying down into a stone quarry

By now the air was full of flak because the Huns had opened up with everything they had. As I dived away to the right to get out of the flak area, I noticed No. 2 of my vic go down in flames, but the pilot appeared to have his plane under control. We could feel jolts as splinters hit the plane. My rear gunner got a clout on the head from a piece of shrapnel but he fortunately had his tin hat on and only got a souvenir dent in it. By now our formation was pretty well broken up and it was each man for himself. No. 3 of the vic was also missing.

My observer, who had been trying to get some photos, shouted that two more Me's were coming at us. We were over a huge sand pit or stone quarry and I took the whole formation, or what was left of it, right down into it. We must have gone 30 ft. below ground level—probably the lowest an aircraft has ever flown. But it did fool the Huns and when we came back up we had shaken them off. I tried to get some kind of closer formation in order to concentrate our fire-power and finally managed to get six planes together. One of our chaps fell out of formation apparently with engine trouble and we saw an Me going for him. He made a beautiful belly landing right in a grove of what looked like pine scrub. Then the Me attacked us. My rear gunner could not get his guns trained on it because it was dead behind us and he could not fire without shooting off our own tail. The plane beside me was having trouble with its hydraulic gear and the gunner couldn't get his turret working. I sideslipped to get a better angle and my gunner opened fire. Other planes were also firing. We saw the Hun crash and his plane bounce on the ground. The maneuver had brought us so low that I heard my observer shout and turned just in time to avoid a church steeple. In banking to miss it,

We urge you and every American to investigate this Sensational Motion Picture!

It is outright pro-movie propaganda.

It is obviously designed to win new followers for the screen.

It will stir up intense national feelings of excitement, emotion, pity and pride.

Its insidious purpose is to convince people that pictures can be both completely different and completely entertaining.

It will arouse tremendous sentiment in favor of the great director who produced it, the brilliant author who wrote it, the fine cast who play it.

It is just a simple story of what happens when a man turns from all that love can give to All That Money Can Buy... But it is one of the greatest motion pictures ever made.

Please investigate it—soon.

my port wing caught the top of a tree and I thought we were going to pile up right in a village square. But the plane righted itself just in time. It was fortunate we had unloaded our bombs.

As we approached the coast the Me's left us and we tacked on to a larger formation of Bienheims. Above us we saw a Ju 52, one of the large German transport planes, flying slowly. Its pilot was obviously unaware that we were under him. We all nosed up and everyone had a crack at it. We last saw it going down behind a clump of trees. I'll bet that Jerry never knew what hit him.

Off the Dutch coast we ran into a big mix-up between a group of Me's and the Whirlwind escort that had come over to meet us. The Germans had obviously been sent out to intercept us. Our fighters seemed to be doing a good job on the Huns because only one peeled off to attack us. He went after the front flight from behind and his first burst sent one of our chaps into the sea, but those following shot down the Me at about the same instant so that both planes crashed in the water within a few yards of one another. It certainly was a relief to us to see the Whirlwinds on the job because we had been counting on interception off the Dutch coast and were not looking forward to it.

Over the North Sea we ran into heavy rain, which acted as a screen and enabled us to bring together our stragglers. When we got home we found a great crowd waiting for us. Even the roads leading to the airdrome were lined with people. It was like a peacetime flying show. They had probably seen us take off and guessed what was up. We gave them a pretty good show, too, because several of the chaps had had their hydraulic gear shot up and couldn't get their landing wheels down. They had to do a belly landing, which looks spectacular but isn't so dangerous provided your wings and tail haven't been shot up. Our last plane came in at 13:13 o'clock.

Most of us felt rather flat out for a few hours after we'd landed and made our report. Rather like having a hangover. Over there we didn't have much time to think about it--too damned busy. Now I suppose there's no point in thinking about it. It wasn't much of a show, really.

Banking to miss a church steeple, the squadron leader's plane clipped the top of a tree (right) and he thought "we were going to pile up right in a village square." Luckily the plane had dropped its bombs and was light enough to gain altitude quickly.

Here's the New-type Motor Oil which sold a "Year's Production" in 5 months

bring extra protection under extreme conditions

SHELL men had great expectations when the new Shell X-100 Motor Oil was at last offered to the public—late in the spring of this year. Scientists at the "University of Petroleum," Shell's $3,500,000 research laboratories, had worked on it for 3 years.

It had made a wonderful record in 5,000,000 miles of test driving under all conditions—including the most extreme. So the production schedule was set high—according to some of the conservatives, far too high for reasonable hope of sales, with a new product selling at 35¢ a quart.

NOW IT'S TIME TO REPORT: From the first week, those "optimistic" production schedules had to be stepped up—to meet sales demand.

After five months (as this goes to press) the production of Shell X-100 Motor Oil originally scheduled for a full year has been sold.

And these sales aren't to motorists who'll "try anything once." Repeat sales are the rule—to motorists whose standards of comparison are the highest.

IMPORTANT NOTICE—With drastic cuts in automobile production, your present car has increased in value. Take the best care of it—or the new car on which you succeed in getting delivery. The regular use of Shell X-100 is safety insurance for your engine—ask your Shell dealer to DRAIN AND RE-FILL WITH SHELL X-100 NOW.

SPECTATORS LINE UP ALONG PLOWED STRIPS AT THE CORN BELT CONTEST AND WATCH WITH EXPERT EYES AS THREE CONTESTANTS CUT THE FIELD WITH NEAT FURROWS

A JUDGE MEASURES A FURROW TO MAKE SURE THAT DEPTH OF CUT IS CORRECT

PLOWING

FARMERS MEET IN FINE FURROW CONTEST

The best-plowed land in all southern Iowa on Sept. 20 was the farm of Miss Iva Turner, six miles from Albia in Monroe County. On Miss Turner's farm that day 38 farmers from Iowa and two nearby States set their plows to the rich black Iowa loam and cut the earth with the finest furrows they could make. They were competing in one of the big American plowing competitions, the third annual Corn Belt Plowing Match sponsored by radio station WHO. This year almost 20,000 farmers and their families came to Albia to cheer on their county favorites, complain at the judge's decisions and mark shrewdly the precise contours of a well-turned furrow.

In America's autumn farm calendar, plowing matches come just before October corn-husking contests. They have been held in the U. S. for more than 60 years, the oldest being the famous competition at Wheatland, Ill. Prizes are awarded solely on the quality of plowing—straightness of furrow, opening of furrow, evenness of furrow ends, conformation, "trash" coverage, general uniformity. Each contestant was given up to three-quarters of an acre and two hours in which to plow it. This was plenty of time, the emphasis being placed on quality, not on speed. There were contests for tractors, for horses, for farm lads under 18 and there was a super-contest for the "Champion of Champions." This division was restricted to farmers who had already won major plowing contests. To the chagrin of all good Iowans, the prize was carried off by a man from Missouri named Leo Drake.

A well-plowed field looks like this from a point just above a worm's-eye view. The furrows run straight down the hill and the neatly turned bottom shows back in even hollows. The topsoil has been turned over evenly and the plow's moldboard has "scored" well, leaving no lumps of dirt or gaps in lines. The "trash" (corn cobs, stalks) has been well covered. There's no prescribed size for furrows. They can be 12 to 16 in. wide, depending on the size of plow used.

They can be 5 to 8 in. deep, depending on what the farmer might plant. Unfortunately, plowing is necessary so that the soil can be properly harrowed and seed sown for even germination. Because they are given up to time in contests, farmers are more fussy here than they would be at home where a farmer has to work fast and where the problem of getting the furrows lined up exactly seems less important than getting a good plow job to be sure down.

The Champion of Champions was Leo Drake who got $40 cash and a blue ribbon for his victory. A well-known Midwest plowman, Farmer Drake comes from Memphis, Scotland County, Mo., has won many other plowing contests. A farmer for 18 years, he is tenant now on a 320-acre place. His son did well in the junior plowing match.

Horse-drawn plows were more in evidence this year than they had been at the previous Corn Belt plowing matches—although now, with farm help hard to get, many farmers who favor horses have to switch to tractors which require less labor. Biggest horse-drawn plow at Corn Belt contest was Wilmer Newlin's twelve-horse hitch.

Only plowlady was Mrs. William Holmstrom of Geneseo, Ill., entry in Champion of Champions division. While she plowed, her husband took care of their five-month-old baby. Things were tough for Mrs. Holmstrom. She used a big three-bottom plow that was strange to her. She hit a bad wet spot. And despite Mr. Holmstrom's ministrations, her baby's fretting distracted Mrs. Holmstrom. She came in fourth and last.

PARTS FOR ASSEMBLY ARE ARRANGED IN A SEMICIRCLE WITHIN THE NORMAL GRASP RANGE OF THE WORKER'S TWO HANDS. WORK TRAYS ARE USUALLY SET OUT IN AN ARC

OUTPUT IS INCREASED 25 PERCENT BY WORK SIMPLIFICATION SYSTEM

The cheapest and best way to increase industrial production is to make each operation simpler and easier for the worker. This seemingly obvious principle dates back only to 1910 and the pioneer work of the late Frank B. Gilbreth and his wife, Dr. Lillian Gilbreth. It is still news to most plant executives. They are learning about it, however, from Allan H. Mogensen of New York City and New York University Professor David B. Porter. In the last year they have trained 1,000 executives in spot clinics in defense production plants. Where work-simplification methods have been applied, output has jumped 25 to 30%.

Application is as simple as the principle. It is here shown applied to a typically inefficient small parts assembly job. First, a semicircular work area (above) eliminates tiring and time-consuming reaching. The wasteful use of "one hand to hold" motions is ruled out by work-holding jigs, which free both hands for rhythmic and balanced operation. Tools are positioned over the work to obviate reaching and fumbling.

Inefficient assembly of water cut-off valve, photographed with Gjon Mili's repetitive flash, shows (left) the hands reaching to pick up two parts. The left hand then holds (center) and the right performs rest of operation alone, picking up screw, setting it, picking up screwdriver and turning screw home. In same length of time, worker below assembles two units.

Efficient assembly in semicircular work area begins with both hands picking up identical parts from center trays, seating them in double jig (left). Simultaneously they next put two handles in place and then set the two screws (center). Two positioned screwdrivers (right) are at hand to finish job. Simultaneous operation of both hands really requires less effort.

Work simplification (continued)

Wrist motion is here shown by Mili's repetitive dash. Simplest motion on work-simplification scale involves only the fingers. More complex motions are shown below.

Forearm motion is demonstrated with swinging of hammer. Work-simplification experts analyze a worker's motions, try to eliminate some of them and shorten others.

Two-arm motion is involved in sawing. Some efficiency systems evoke "speed-up" cry. The work-simplification system, however, has been written into union contracts.

CAL-AERO

CIVILIAN SCHOOL TRAINS
4,000 ARMY FLIERS A YEAR

On Saturday mornings the gay music of bugles and drums floats out over the flat dusty landing field of Cal-Aero Academy at Ontario, Calif., dances through the surrounding orange groves, echoes toward the crags of nearby San Antonio peak. Across the field, keeping time with the music, march some 500 husky flying cadets. Near the control tower, they swing in from behind their colors and pass in review (above) before the Academy officers.

Four thousand such cadets will be trained before next July at Cal-Aero. They are all regulars in the U. S. Army. Yet Cal-Aero itself is not an Army school. Instead it is owned and operated by civilians.

Like 42 other flying schools scattered throughout the country, it has volunteered to help the Army train 30,000 pilots a year by giving "primary" training (the first of three ten-week periods into which Army pilot training is divided) to Army cadets. Along with two other schools, Cal-Aero also gives "bas C" training (the second ten-week period).

As soon as the cadets have graduated from Cal-Aero, they move on to a regular Army flying field like Kelly Field in Texas or Stockton in California for their "advanced" training (last ten-week period). There, after they have passed all their tests, they will receive commissions as Air Corps second lieutenants.

This is Cal-Aero as seen over the tip of a Vultee trainer's wing. Two nearest hangars house Stearman for primary training; farthest hangars house Vultees for basic training. The low buildings are combined barracks and classrooms. Below: Cadet Larry Lightner, carrying all his new equipment, is assigned to his room.

CAL-AERO MAINTAINS TRADITIONS

Little more than a year ago the Cal-Aero field at Ontario was a barley patch. Since then Major C. C. Mosley, an active Army flier who also runs a school for Army mechanics and R. A. F. pilots, has spent more than $200,000 on barracks, hangars and landing fields. Major Mosley designed the buildings. Famed famed Artist Mollard Sheets to choose the color scheme.

Major Mosley has even had to supply all the equipment himself. From the Army he has rented 145 Stearman and Vultee trainers. From among civilian pilots, many of whom are graduates of air schools in the Southwest, he has hired 100 instructors.

For the construction of this flying school, therefore, as for the construction of the other 44 civilian schools throughout the country, the Army has not paid a cent. It has merely assigned 13 Air Corps officers to the school as supervisors and signed a contract with Major Mosley agreeing to pay him $17.50 per cadet flying hour. Because the primary training course requires 60 hours of flying time and the basic course requires 70 hours, this contract represents a guaranteed income to Cal-Aero of some $22,300 for every cadet graduated. Under these terms Major Mosley, who says he costs $14.90 per flying hour merely to operate a plane, does not know whether he will make any money or not. But he is willing to try.

The pictures on this page show the progress of Cadet Larry Lightner through Major Mosley's school. A graduate of

A mass gymnastic drill on the smoke-baked flying field keeps the cadets in good physical shape. Such sports as football and basketball are not encouraged.

OF WEST POINT, RANDOLPH FIELD

Ohio Wesleyan in 1940, Larry took a job after commencement with the Douglas Aircraft Co. This spring he joined the Army and entered Cal-Aero. Quickly he became an outstanding man in his class. At the end of his first ten weeks he was promoted to Cadet Sergeant, and by the time he graduated early this fall he was a Cadet First Captain, highest rank obtainable at Cal-Aero. He is now at Stockton, Calif., where he will soon get his commission.

Although it is run by civilians, Cal-Aero maintains all the military traditions of West Point and Randolph Field. Discipline is strict. The work is hard. When a cadet is not receiving flying instructions, he is going to ground school, learning mathematics, navigation, radio and engine construction. In between times he is taught military customs and courtesies. He also learns to drill and, because he will someday be an officer in the U. S. Army, he learns how to give military orders.

Hazing at Cal-Aero is not permitted but there are various forms of initiation. Lowerclassmen, called "jackpots," must address upper classmen as "sir," may not sit against the back of their chairs at mess (far right). Going from barracks to field, "jackpots" may be ordered to "fly" (walk with their arms outstretched). Then there is a game called "Air Raid." When an upperclassman hollers "Air Raid" in the barracks, all the "jackpots" must dive between the mattress and the springs at the head of their beds, crawl through to the foot.

because cadets might get hurt, but calisthenics, squash, tennis and badminton are approved. Cadets must be in perfect shape before they enter the Air Corps.

"On the double," upperclassmen yell at Newcomers Larry Lightner (in shirt sleeves) and George Gould, as they race past on way to register. A minute before upperclassmen, called "processing squad," have met Lightner and Gould at gate, welcomed them to Cal-Aero, then gruffly ordered them to "wipe the smile off your face."

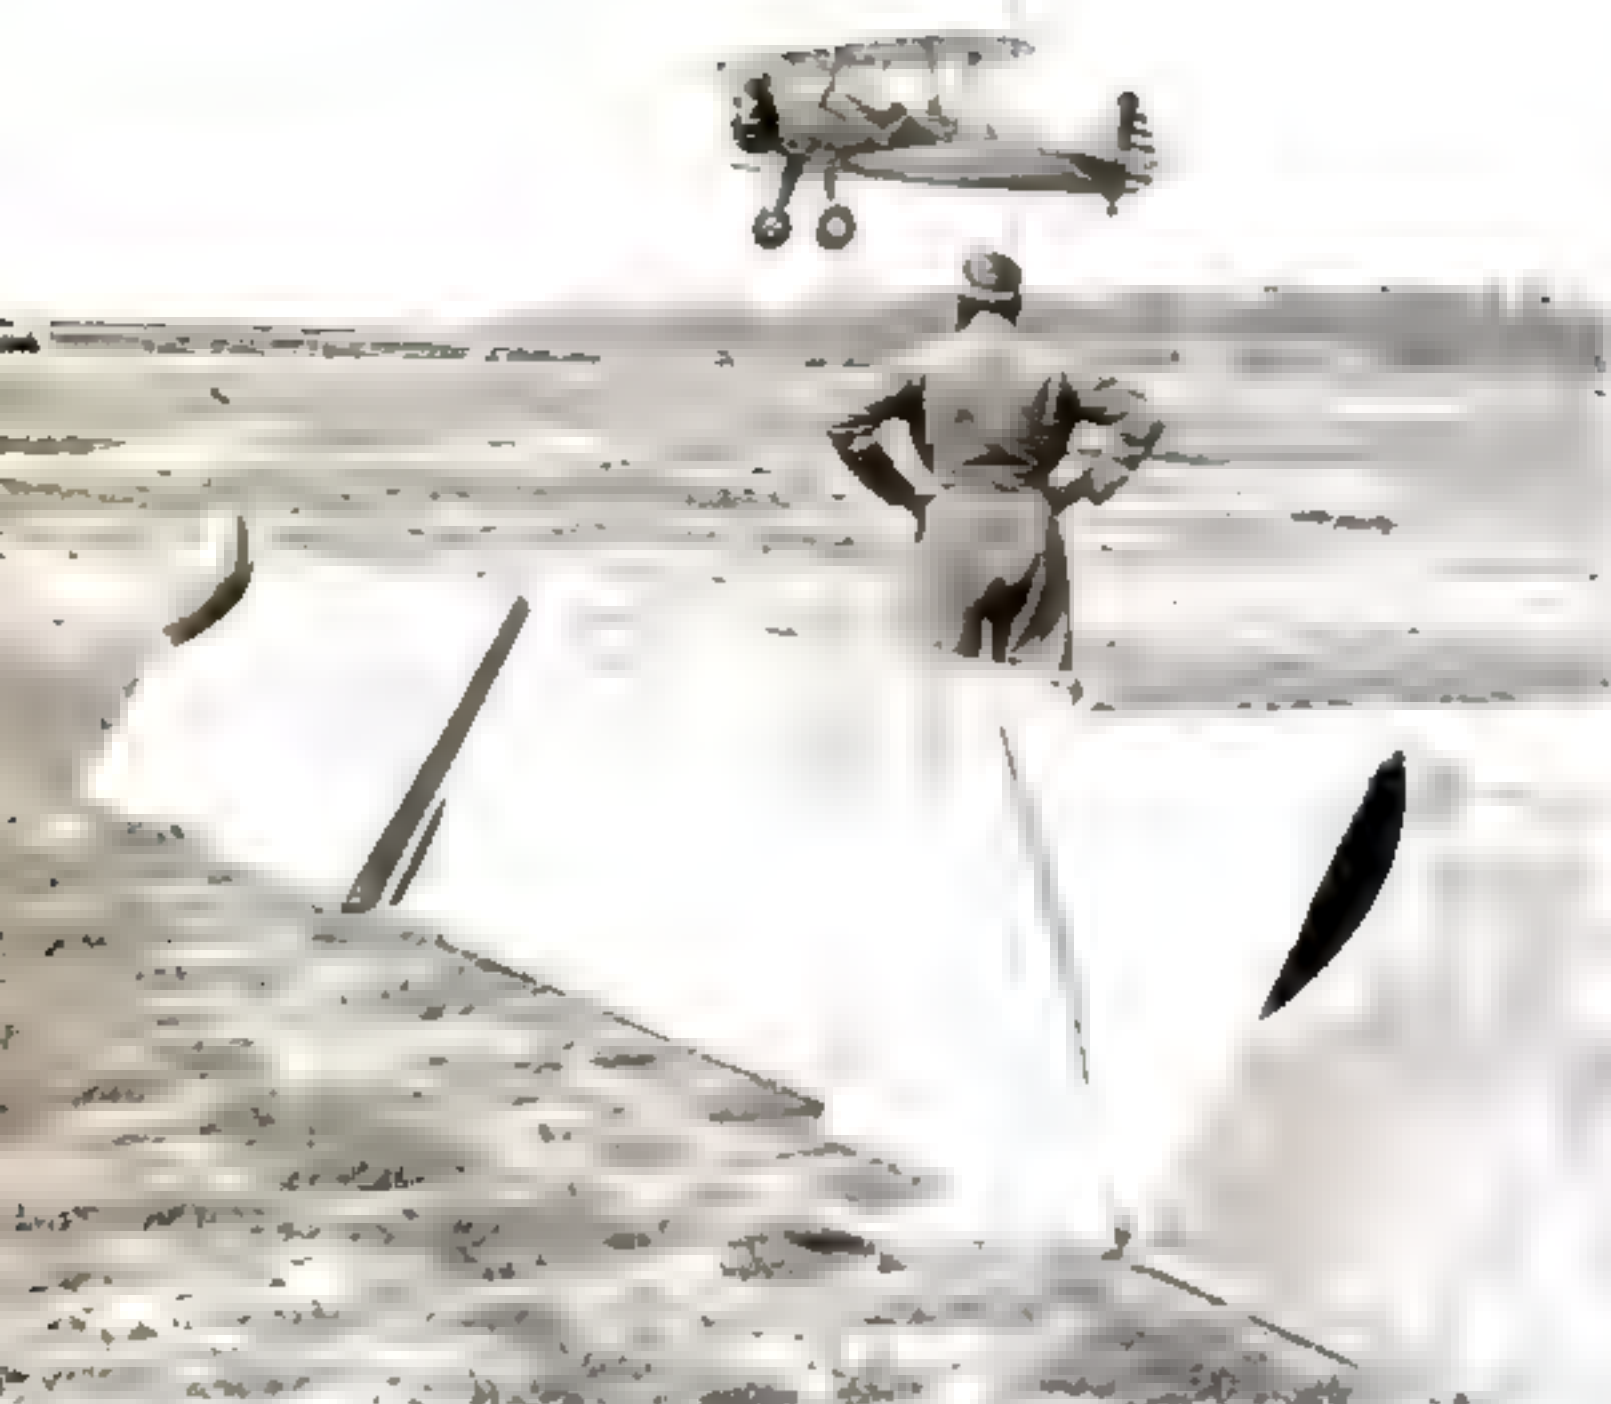

Eating "square meals" is required of all "jackpots". This means they must sit like Lightner is doing here—away from chair, with back rigid and square. Below—after being appointed cadet officer early in second two-week period, Lightner marches a group of students off for athletic practice on a test near end of "hangers."

HE FLOATS INTO A SMOOTH LANDING WHILE INSTRUCTOR RAISES ARMS, SIGNALS O.K.

CADET LIGHTNER MAKES HIS FIRST SOLO FLIGHT WHILE HIS INSTRUCTOR WATCHES

In the pictures above Cadet Larry Lightner is making his first solo flight. He has had eight hours of dual instruction, during which he has learned straight and level flying, gentle and medium turns, how to stall, and how to take a plane out of a spin.

Now he is confident he knows how to fly a plane, but he is still nervous. However, unlike many cadets, he does a good job on the first solo. He takes off evenly, comes in smoothly to a three-point landing.

From this flight on, Larry's progress was fast. By the end of his first ten weeks, he was proficient in all fundamental maneuvers, including aerobatics, snap rolls and Immelmann turns. During next ten weeks, shifted from a primary trainer to a heavier basic training plane, he learned instrument flying, three-plane formations and night flying. Then he was ready to go on to advanced training, where he is now learning pursuit formations, pursuit tactics and gunnery.

APPALACHIAN TRAIL

IT WINDS 2,050 MILES FROM MAINE TO GEORGIA

All Photographs for LIFE by Eliot Elisofon

The Appalachian Trail is the longest footpath in the world. It begins on a mountaintop in Maine and ends on a mountaintop in Georgia. Between these two ultimate bastions this long, long trail goes a winding through 14 States, through forests and fields, across rivers and streams, following always the great mountain system which separates the heart of the continent from the East's flat coastal plain. It tops the White Mountains of New Hampshire, the Green Mountains of Vermont, the Berkshires of Massachusetts, the wooded hills of northern New Jersey, Pennsylvania's Alleghenies, Virginia's Blue Ridge, and the Great Smokies of North Carolina and Tennessee. It never strays far from civilization, yet civilization never nips at its course. It is 2,050 miles long and 4 ft. wide. For the hiker, the word Appalachian means endless.

The concept of a continuous footpath paralleling the whole Atlantic coast from Canada virtually to the Gulf came to Boston MacKay of Shirley Center, Mass., just 20 years ago. He knew that wherever the mountains soared from the valleys, men and houses dropped behind. The woods were there and would remain there much as the Iroquois knew them, much as Daniel Boone knew them when he pushed his Wilderness Road down those same valleys to Kentucky 172 years ago. And the mountains and the woods swept from Maine to Georgia in one enormous unbroken arc.

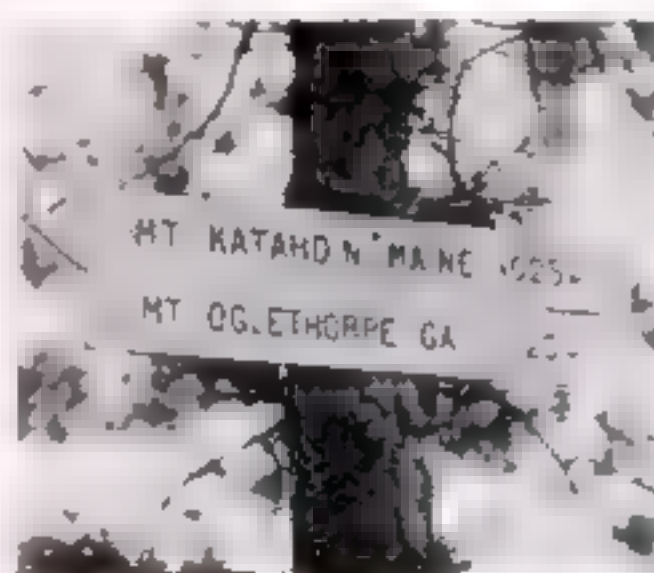

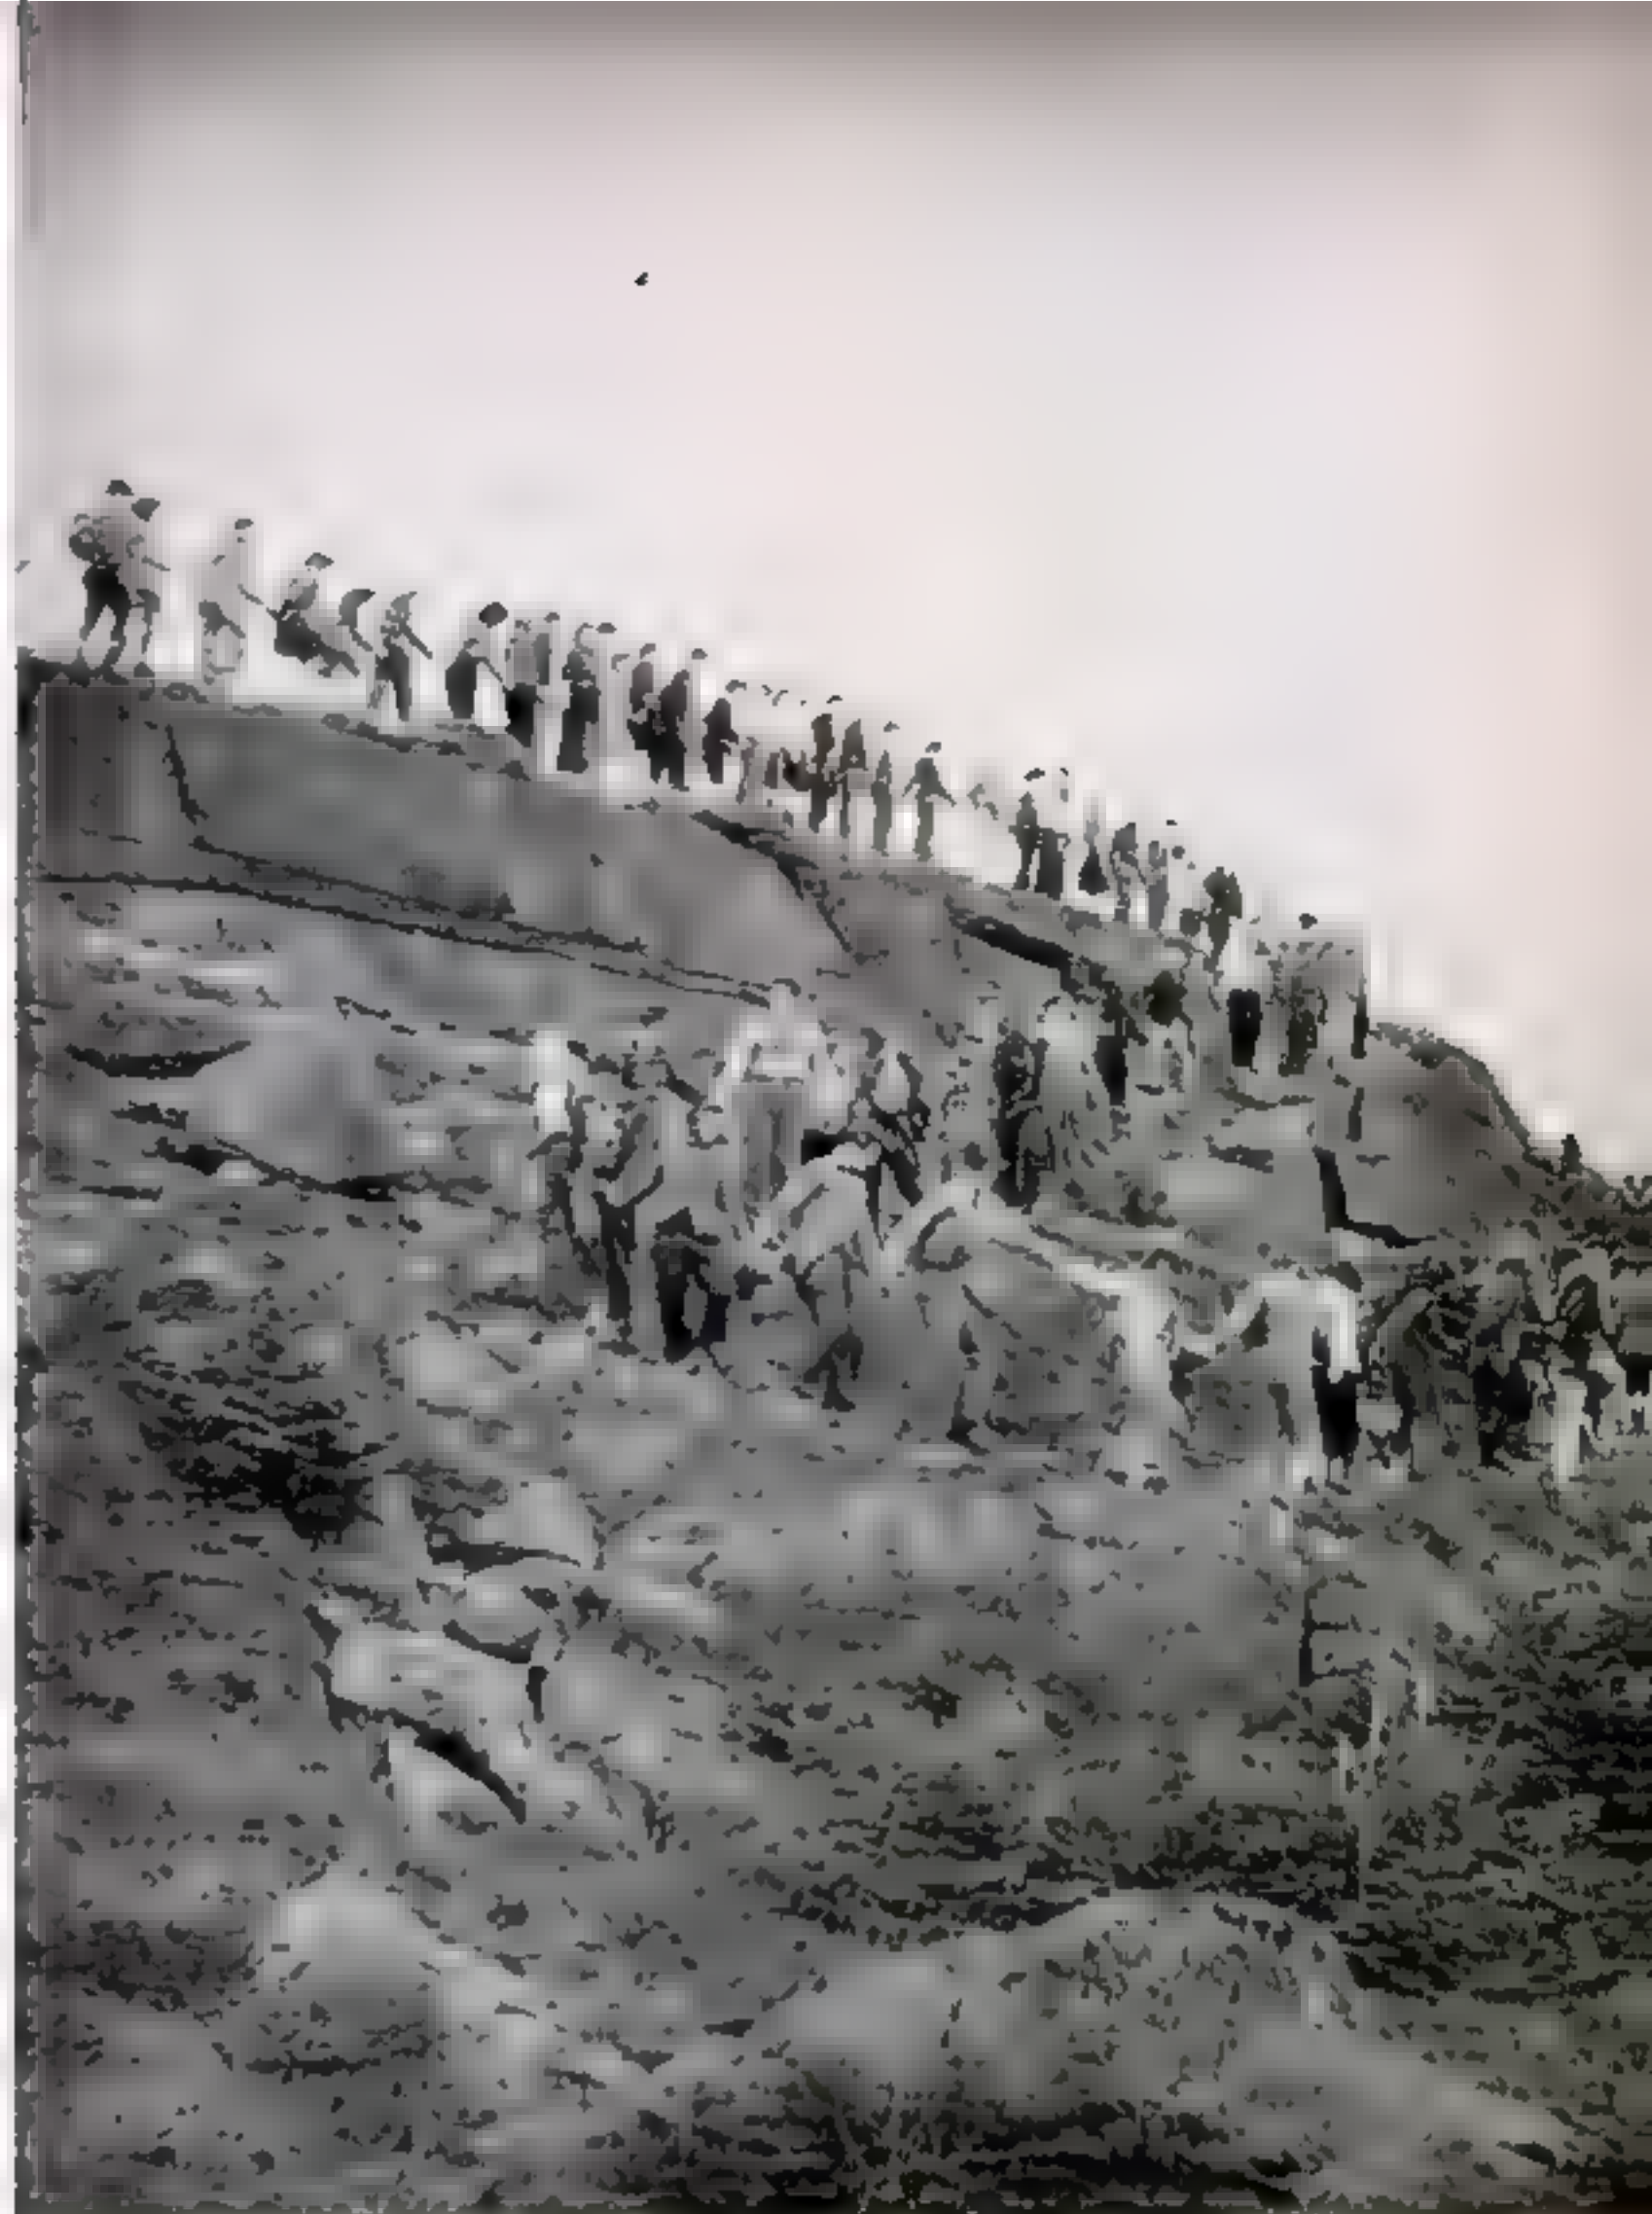

CLOSE, THE ARMS OF THE SPRUCE TREES BARE, THE SUNSETS TURBULENT AND IMMENSE

In 1925 creation of the Appalachian Trail Conference united various hiking clubs which at first only used their local sections of this vast camping ground. Year by year the separate links were joined until in 1937 Mr. Mackaye's dream of the single "endless" trail was fulfilled. Today each district club is responsible for maintaining and keeping clear its own regional link. Roughly one third of the trail traverses national parks. Elsewhere it marches through State and private forests. Only four persons have ever traveled the entire track. No one has ever covered it in a single uninterrupted expedition.

Now in mid October the leaves are aflame on the high, chilly slopes of the White and Green Mountains. Creamy mists restle each morning in the innumerable bends of the Shenandoah. And the immense waves of the Smokies billow bluer than ever in the South's sun-bereaved autumn air. This is the hiker's season, the woodsman's time of the year. For pictures of the Appalachian Trail in autumn color, turn the page.

HALFWAY POST IS IN PENNSYLVANIA

On the trail. Above you see boys and girls of the Bates College Outing Club negotiating a rocky bit on western Maine's Saddleback Mountain. Below, members of the Potomac Appalachian Trail Club set out with weeders, shears and axes to clear a stretch of trail in Virginia.

In Shenandoah National Park an unexpected October snowfall sends the members of a local club hurrying to one of the closed shelters where they maintain a long-term search of the trail. These shelters may be used by any hiking group or organization to local headquarters. Similar cabin-type shelters are found on all parts of the trail.

Within the closed shelter weary hikers find meals, blankets, cooking utensils, dishes. These basic supplies are less numerous along the trail than in the summer months. Most of them are sold daily, easy to keep in a small space, most of them are new equipment. The office of the Appalachian Trail Conference is at Washington, D.C.

NORTHERN BASTION OF THE APPALACHIAN TRAIL IS MAINE'S MIGHTY MT. KATAHDIN. FROM ITS SUMMIT THE TRAIL WINDS DOWN NEAR RIDGE TO DAICEY POND BELOW

From Twin Pine Camps on Dacey Pond, hikers and hunters set forth into the great Maine woods. Without base camps like these, the Katahdin region would be virtually inaccessible.

Mt. Washington, the highest peak in New Hampshire's White Mountains and in the northeastern U.S., here rises green and blue above the turning forests and Penobscot River.

Moss-covered logs beside the trail are spangled with the bright leaves of sugar maples, October-dyed. Along here the trail dips into sudden gullies that send of moisture and deep shade.

From summit of Mt. Greylock, the Berkshire Mountains are visible. In the foreground, the steep slopes of the mountain are covered in dense forest.

In Maryland the trail jogs through rolling country, studded with hay mows and big red barns. Along the ridge of South Mountain (in background) fugitive slaves once fled north at night.

Southern terminus of the Appalachian Trail is Georgia's slumberous Mt. Oglethorpe. The great flat ridge at right is its summit. October cotton in foreground is just about ready for picking.

AN UNEXPECTEDLY WARM WELCOME AWAITS A MOVIE STAR WHEN, AS A PUBLICITY STUNT, SHE ACCEPTS AN INVITATION TO THE SENIOR PROM OF A SWANKY PREP SCHOOL.

YOUTH RIDES HIGH IN THE FIRST MUSICAL COMEDY HIT OF THE BROADWAY SEASON

Like a fresh, invigorating breeze, George Abbott's Best Foot Forward has swept down on Broadway to open the New York theater's crowded musical comedy season. As a comedy, it is neither very original nor absorbing. Its story follows the familiar pattern of gaga misadventures that, on stage and screen, forever befall high school or college youths. There is the usual trio of screwball prep school pals, the usual senior prom, the usual unexpected visitor, the usual jealous girl friend and the usual muddled shenanigans righted at the end.

But Best Foot Forward has something infinitely better to offer than its plot. Brilliantly groomed by Broadway's supreme musical producer, its generous cast of teen-age performers is so young and delightful, so giddy with energy and unspoiled fun that the whole show clicks as an evening's joyous entertainment.

How's your "Pep Appeal"?

—by Williamson

Playwright: He says the play hasn't any "whoosh." Now what does that mean?

Wife: No "oomph," my crestfallen celebrity. No zip. No pep appeal. And neither has its author! Now maybe you'll listen to me about neglecting your vitamins! You've got to have them all, you know, and we're making a start right now

Wife: Lesson number one is crisp, delicious KELLOGG'S PEP. It's extra-rich in the two vitamins that are least abundant in ordinary diets—vitamins B<sub>6</sub> and D.

Playwright: Say! Why didn't you tell me PEP tastes so good? You've been holding out on me! Why, it's marvelous!

Playwright: (sometime later) And now, my dear, that I've discovered vitamins and KELLOGG'S PEP, just watch me become the world's "pep appeal" playwright. Why, Shakespeare himself would be green with envy to read the masterpiece I've started here.

Wife: You know what they say: "Where there's pep, there's hope."

Vitamins for pep! Kellogg's Pep for vitamins!

Pep contains per serving: 4/5 to 1/5 the minimum daily need of vitamin B<sub>6</sub> according to age; 1/2 the daily need of vitamin D. For sources of other vitamins, see the Pep package.

Stripped of her clothes by souvenir-hunting prep-schoolers, the visiting movie star finds herself in this lace-covered dilemma just as the faculty stalks solemnly into the prom. If you are not getting enough of those vital food factors—and probably millions of Americans aren't—Enriched Bread will help make up for the lack.

And, the food authorities of the Federal Government reason, an undernourished army is not likely to do its best. Or an undernourished civil population is not likely to put all the needed vigor and power behind our national defense effort. Hence the contribution of Enriched Bread.

As a consumer you don't need to concern yourself about all of the technical details of Fleischmann's Enriched Yeast and what it does for you. You are welcome to these details, but, better yet, you can assure yourself that you are getting the benefit Fleischmann's Enriched Yeast can give you by eating the Enriched Bread containing it.

Fleischmann laboratories developed Hi-B<sub>1</sub> Yeast to help meet the problem of enriching white bread. Fleischmann technical experts are right now working with America's bakers, many of whom are already supplying you with Enriched Bread. Over 500,000,000 loaves have already been baked and sold.

The taste, the texture and the color of the bread is unchanged. But strange as it may seem, those extra food factors in Enriched Bread made with this new Fleischmann's Enriched Hi B<sub>1</sub> Yeast may do much to tip the scales towards better nutrition.

And, of course, such a gain is permanent. Tomorrow's America will inherit this help toward the good health of the people.

BUY BAKERS' BREAD

All modern bakers' bread is rich in nourishment, delicious, economical. And the new Enriched Bread, now made by many bakers, provides all the nourishing, wholesome qualities of white bread, plus an extra supply of two important members of the Vitamin B-Complex (including VITAMIN B<sub>1</sub>), and iron.

Most of the performers of Best Foot Forward are between 16 and 18 years old. Many of them have never been on the professional stage before. To have found them, trained them, geared them smoothly into the intricate fast-moving machinery that makes a Broadway musical was another nod to the chest-thumping legend of the theater, George Abbott. Produce, I'm Yours, George!

All last spring and summer he traveled along the Atlantic seaboard, through the Middle West and the South, and hunting the most promising youngsters of high schools, music studios and dancing academies. The 36 fledglings he finally chose came from 16 States. Among them are four crack dancers, two startlingly accomplished comedians, 14 fast-talking show-biz kids who can make a good song swing and sway. On this page you see six adolescent top-liners, all under 20, all headed for "ing Broadway or Hollywood careers. ## "PRESTONE" ANTI-FREEZE SHORTAGE

THE RAW MATERIALS used in making "Prestone" anti-freeze are first-line defense necessities. Thousands of tons of these raw materials which, under normal conditions, would go into "Prestone" anti-freeze for the public's use, are now being diverted to manufacture vital defense equipment of many different kinds. In fact, some of the uses to which these materials are being put were born in the laboratory but a short time ago.

IN ADDITION, great demands are being made on the finished product, "Prestone" anti-freeze. Liquid-cooled tanks and reconnaissance cars . . . fighter planes and gun tractors . . . trucks and staff cars . . . must be protected. The cooling systems of our speedy patrol torpedo boats must be safe from freeze-up and lay-up.

THE ARMY and the Navy . . . for years large users of "Prestone" anti-freeze . . . now need unprecedented quantities of this dependable winter protection. Their orders must be filled.

ALTHOUGH MILLIONS of gallons of "Prestone" anti-freeze will be available to American motorists . . . although production facilities have been increased to the utmost . . . your dealer may not be able to supply you in this emergency.

TO THE MILLIONS of motorists who every year rely on "Prestone" anti-freeze, we say:—See your dealer early. Late comers who wait for cold snaps may be disappointed.

The service station's job grows BIGGER!

In normal times the car owner was careful or wasteful . . . as he pleased . . . with the gas, oil, rubber, etc., consumed by his car. Now, however, conditions require him to be thrifty with these vital materials of defense.

To be efficiently thrifty you will need the services of a dependable automotive dealer. He can best help you make your motoring an effective part of the national defense. He will recommend, for instance, such conserving practices as properly inflated tires, clean spark plugs, expertly adjusted motor, adequate lubrication, a battery that's always in condition to start your car.

Your Exide Dealer is aware of his part in the program to "keep America rolling." He is scientifically equipped to learn the truth about your battery, conscientious enough to report that truth to you. If a recharge is the answer, he'll tell you so; if you need a new battery, he will urge the greater cranking power and longer life of an Exide Hycap.

This is the time in the year for a battery check-up and your Exide Dealer is the man to see about it.

Listen, Mothers, All-leather Shoes* Stand More Scrimmage!

IT takes all-leather shoes* to stand hard play and to protect properly the feet and health of growing children.

But, unfortunately, many children's shoes are not all leather. To save a few cents, paper or fiberboard materials that can't resist wear, water and abuse as well as leather, are often substituted in vital hidden parts. Such shoes quickly lose their shape and fit—soon go to pieces.

Don't penalize your child. Insist on Poll-Parrot or Star Brand Shoes because they never contain substitute paper or fiberboard for all leather, either in the parts you can see, or in hidden counters, insoles, or heel bases. These shoes are more economical, too, because they keep their shape and fit under rougher, tougher punishment. Roberts, Johnson & Rand, Branch of International Shoe Company, St. Louis, Missouri.

IMPORTANT! Always have shoes fitted to the feet!

The proper shoes in last and size for your child can only be determined when fitted directly on the feet. Guess-work is dangerous. Children's feet grow very fast, changing constantly in length, width and thickness. Be sure to see a trained Poll-Parrot or Star Brand dealer for an accurate and reliable fitting.

ACTUAL LETTER FROM BRITISH PRISONER OF WAR IN GERMANY

(WORD-FOR-WORD COPY OF THE ABOVE LETTER) ★

Gentlemen, aren't you surprised with a P. O. W. letter? Well I am one of the enthusiastic users of your "Shavemaster" or rather I was until my capture when I lost my kit and with it my Shavemaster. How I value this precious gadget you may judge by the fact that I have given up one of the two monthly letters we are allowed to write. I would highly appreciate it, if you would be so generous and give me the opportunity to advertise your Shavemaster (220 volts) for the coming of better days amongst my comrades here, you would make me very happy. I would not hesitate to buy a new Shavemaster but I am sure you understand that it is impossible under the present circumstances. We are well treated here, but of course we are not allowed to send any money out of this country. So if you would be kind enough to allow me credit until the end of the war and let me have two Shavemasters, one for myself and one for my friend here, I would be very grateful. The current here is 220 volt. My address here is Captain C. M. P. How, British P. O. W., Kriegsgefangenen No. 6, Oflog VII C Z, Germany. Forgive me for approaching you like this but I know you are broadminded and appreciate my predicament. A million thanks and let's hope, Auf Wiedersehen. For purposes of good faith in the event of your allowing me credit, my home address is 16 Arundel Rd., Littlehampton, Sussex, England. Yours faithfully, C. M. P. How ★The handwriting of the above letter was identified by Captain Pemberton How as genuine. Efforts were made to comply with the Captain's request for the shipment of two Shavemasters to Kriegsgefangenen No. 6, Germany.

MIXED GRILL—with shoulder lamb chop, pure pork sausage links, bacon and pineapple ring with currant jelly—easy to prepare—all broiled at same time.

Recommended by the Council on and Nutrition of the American Medical Association

Sweet music for all the world—the noontime whistle. When twelve o'clock rolls 'round the whole world feels hungry. Watch them rush, watch them run, watch them head straight for home, restaurant or lunch box.

When noontime comes America has always said,

"Let's eat." Now in these geared-up days when the call is for a healthy and vigorous nation, America needs to say at noon, "Let's eat well." For most of us that means meat on the noon table.

... What's on your plate at noon may contribute a lot to your efficiency in the afternoon.

MEAT at NOON

In the helter-skelter of modern commercial life, the luncheon hour has become a shopping hour, a rush-around hour—anything but a period of pleasant relaxation and intelligent eating. Through the hurried, carelessly chosen lunch, many are needlessly penalizing their health and their performance. . . . Isn't it time to get back to the sane side of noon?

IT STANDS to reason that your body needs nourishment at the very height of its most productive hours.

Not only that, but too often the effects of the haphazard lunch further aggravate the effects of the sketchy, haphazard breakfast, which means practically 24 hours from one square meal to the next.

Dietetically one of the principal penalties of the modern lunch is protein deficiency. Without adequate proteins, the tissues of the body cannot be repaired or replaced.

Whether you go home for lunch, go to a restaurant or eat out of a lunch box, safeguard yourself against protein deficiency by making meat an important part of your balanced noonday meal, for meat is a rich source of complete, high quality proteins.

In meat you also get natural B vitamins—vitamin B<sub>1</sub> (thiamine), vitamin B<sub>2</sub> (riboflavin) and nicotinic acid, a vitamin needed for the prevention of pellagra. These vitamins promote good appetite and protect against certain diseases and nervous disorders that might result from their deficiency. In meat you also get important minerals, including iron and copper which help build good, red blood, and phosphorus, another dietary essential.

Many of these food essentials are not stored in the body to any extent... must be supplied daily in the foods you eat.

There's something about meat on the table that puts more pleasure in the lunch hour; that makes you feel like hitting the ball harder when you get back on the job.

Make meat an important part of your lunches for a week or so and see if you don't realize its value in your workaday diet.

AMERICAN MEAT INSTITUTE, Chicago

Which Group Do You Belong In?

MEAT AT NOON FOR THE GIRL WHO WORKS—

The quick, inadequate lunch at noon often impairs efficiency in the afternoon. Meat at noon makes for a better balanced meal.

MEAT AT NOON FOR THE MAN WHO WORKS—

A 150-pound man pushing a push button needs the same amount of proteins as a 150-pound man pushing a wheelbarrow. Meat is a splendid source of highest quality proteins.

MEAT AT NOON FOR THE CHILD AT SCHOOL—

Continued protein deficiency in children's diets may keep them under par mentally and physically and retard their growth.

MEAT AT NOON FOR THE WOMAN AT HOME—Too often she merely "snacks"—without troubling to give herself the balanced meal she requires. Too often she's "simply worn out" at night because of improper nutrition. Meat, as part of a balanced lunch at noon, can do wonders in how she feels.

Five Thrifty Noontime Meals Featuring Meat

1. Frankfurters: Hot potato salad, Chopped pickle relish, Stewed tomatoes, Berry Pie, Coffee. 2. Fresh Brisket of Beef with Horse-radish Sauce: Buttered cabbage, Kidney beans, Cherries, Nut cookies, Coffee. 3. Broiled Candied Ham: Sweet potatoes (candied), Green beans, Fruit gelatin, Milk. 4. Hamburgers: Mexican corn, New potatoes in cream, Molded vegetable salad, Fruit, Coffee. 5. Lamb Fricassee: Rice, Harvard beets, Mixed green salad, Prune whip, Milk.

Read what happened when she saw the most spectacular achievement in Silverplate History

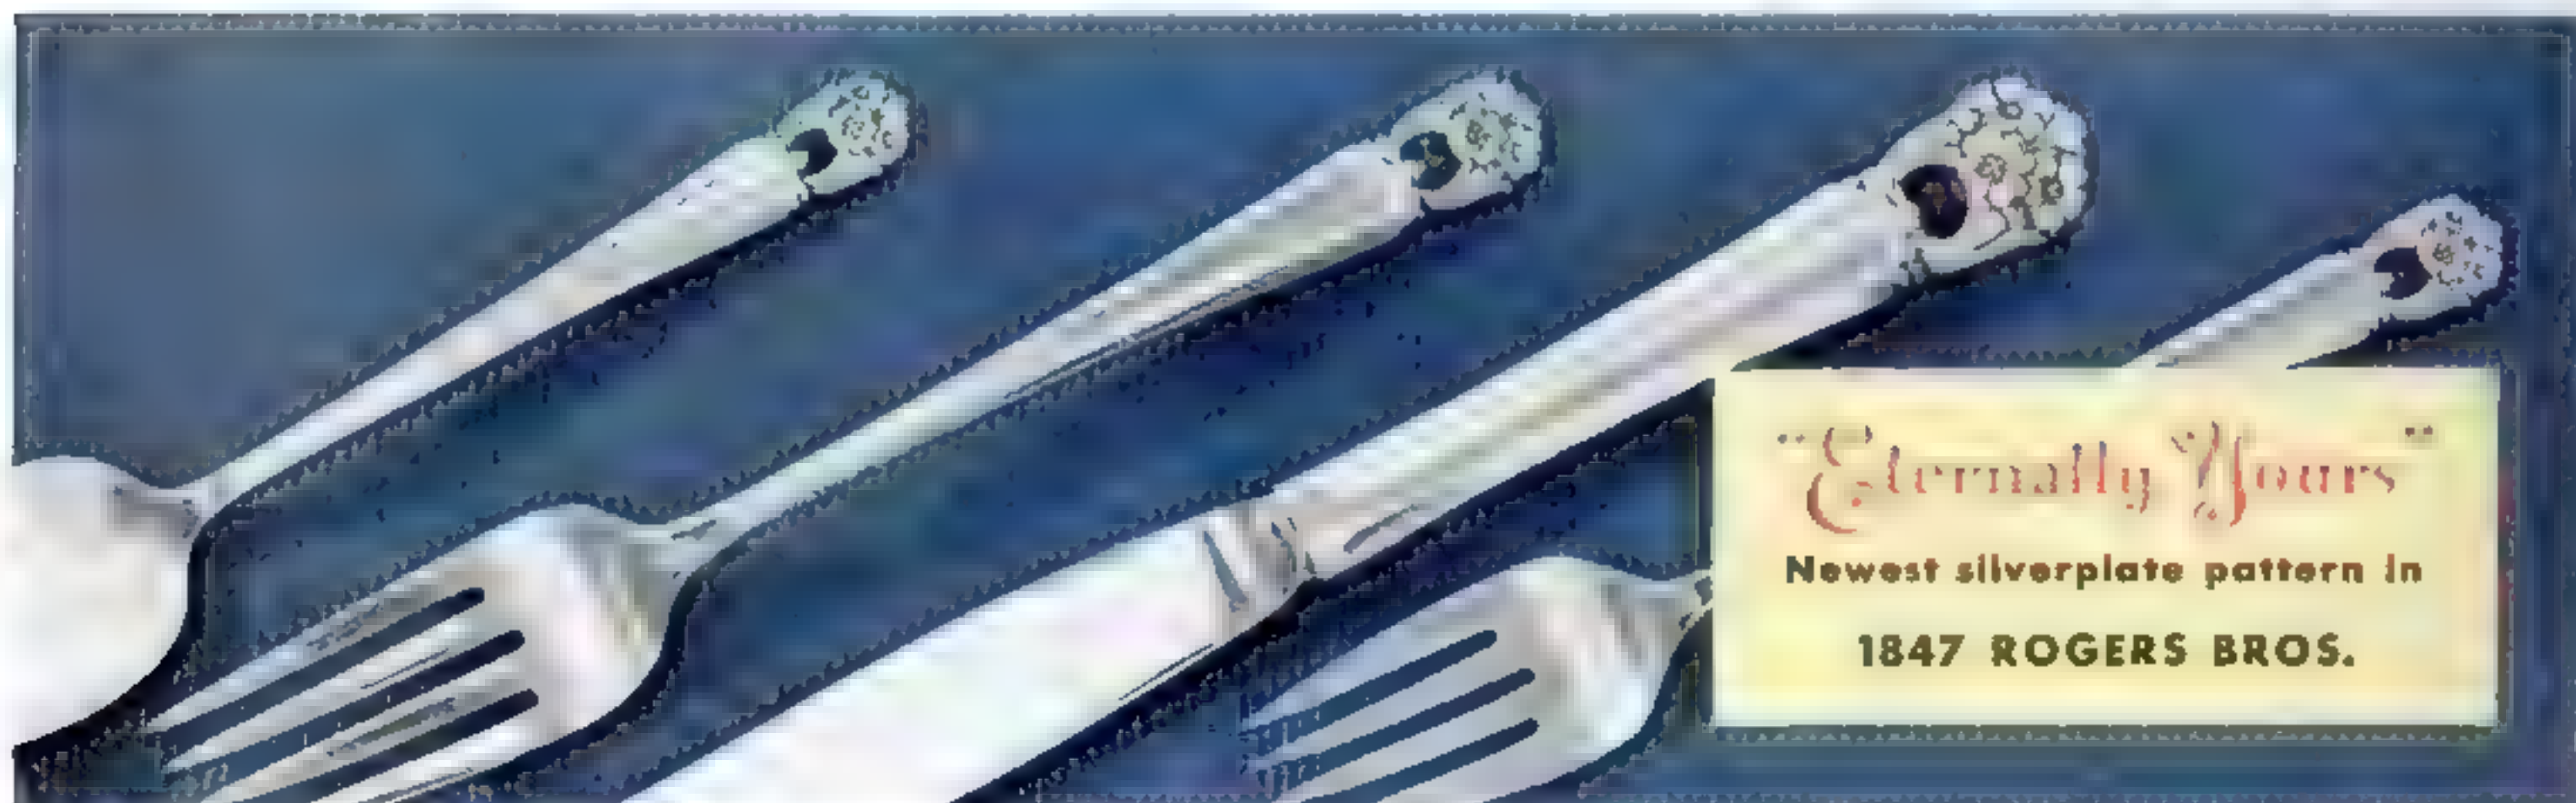

"I WISH YOU COULD HAVE BEEN WITH ME when I showed 'Eternally Yours' to Myrna Loy," said Conrad Nagel, director of 1847 Rogers Bros.' famous Silver Theater of the radio."

"Conrad!" exclaimed this charming Metro-Goldwyn Mayer star of Shadow of the Thin Man, "what exquisite silverplate! It's simply beautiful! Why it looks like the very finest sterling silver... it feels like solid silver! I've never seen anything so breath-taking!"

That I explained to her how new skills in silver-making technique have made possible the higher ornamentation—the lovely open-work, the perfect balance of 'Eternally Yours.' But Myrna was even more amazed when I showed her the knives with open work handles, masterpieces of technique never before achieved in silverplate and rare in even the most costly solid silver.

"Gorgeous!" she sighed when I had finished. "What a lovely, lasting present for any friend!"

Turner and Gable make sizzling team

Never mind the story of Honky Tonk. It is strictly synthetic. Its gold miners and saloon toughs, its bad men and shady ladies are there only to provide a colorful Wild West background for more fundamental business. And that business is a series of sizzling bedroom scenes in which, in a variety of dress and undress, Clark Gable and Lana Turner make love.

For Gable, this means another rough and rowdy part like Rhett Butler in Gone With The Wind, the kind of sardonic, hell-raising rogue that has kept him an irresistible box-office magnet. For Turner, now graduated from sweaters to nightgowns, it means the topmost rung in her meteoric four-year climb to success. For cinema fans, it means the birth of a new starring team, the hottest, most electric combination of movie personalities since Boyer and LaMarr.

GIRLS WHO WANT "That New York Look"

Miss Helen Wilson,
attractive young secretary tells how she assembles a wardrobe of 5 New York Creations for only $37.75

"HOW DO I DO IT?—it's really very easy," says Helen Wilson, when asked how she manages to dress so well on the average office girl's salary. "The trick is to think about your entire wardrobe before you buy a thing."

"Most business girls, today, realize that the impression they make in the office is almost as important as the job itself. They must look right—all the time. No one can wear the same dress, day after day, and still look fresh and attractive."

"Early each season I pick out one good dress with accessories to match. Then, I fill in with other dresses that go with these same accessories. That way I know I always appear at my best. I plan my 'out-of-the-office' wardrobe the same way."

"Of course I have to make dresses 'look right' as long as possible. There are several ways to do this—I try not to wear the same dress two days in succession and I always buy New York Creations. Since these dresses are the latest from New York, I know they'll be 'good' longer—and they're made so well that they wear and wear."

No matter how little you plan to pay for your new Fall dresses, look first for the New York Creation label—the hallmark of fashion rightness and quality. NEW YORK DRESS INSTITUTE, 1450 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Rushing out of subway to Saturday afternoon movie date, Helen grabs a paper. Her new fly-buttoned dress has amusing black-velveteen applique. Her home is in St. Albans, Long Island.

During working hours Helen's blue and red glen plaid, two-piece dress reflects correct choice of business attire. She wears it with or without a blouse. She takes letter from her boss in a New York office.

After choir practice at Presbyterian Church, Helen and date stop off for a chat and a soda. She also wears this attractive, new black tunic dress, with ruffles edged in red, on Sundays and at informal evening parties.

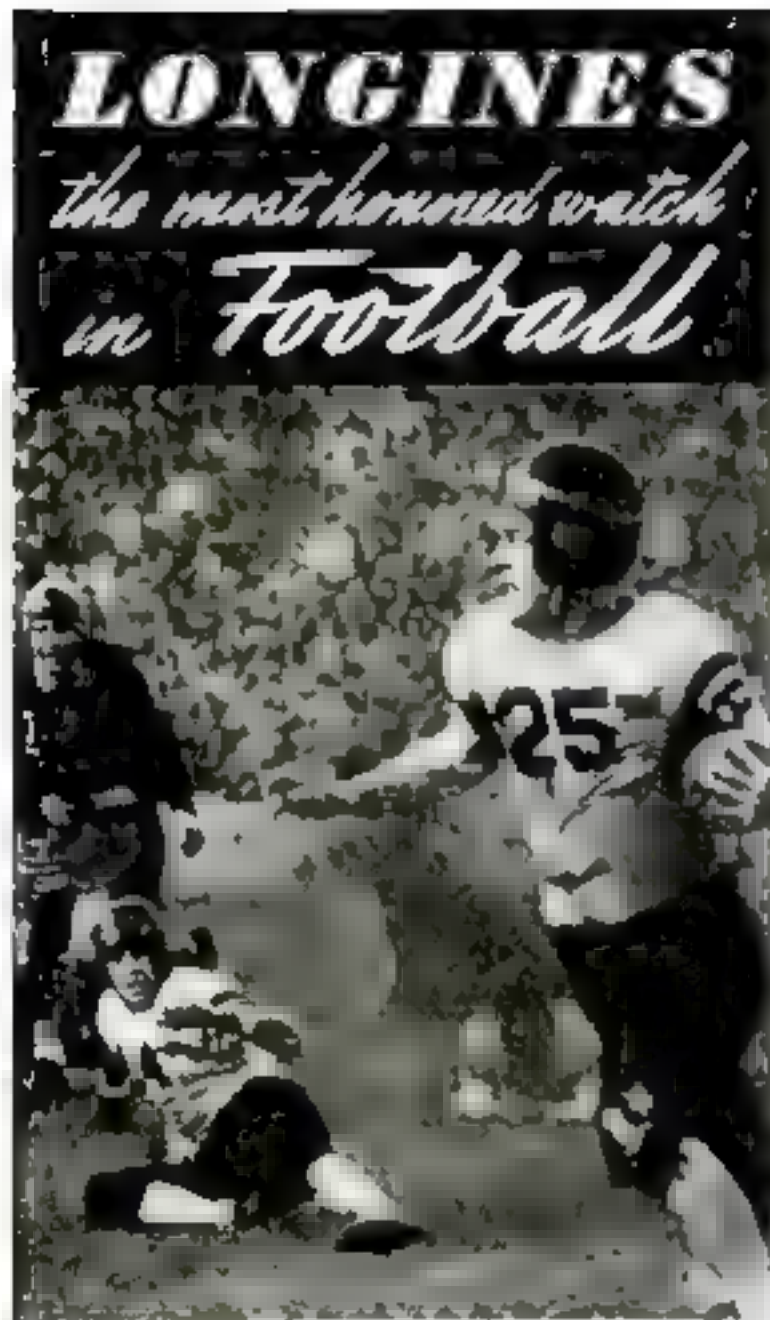

Doing her part to help entertain the boys at a local Service party, Helen leaves the dance floor with her partner for a fast game of ping-pong. All the boys find Helen's swishing, rose taffeta dress with deeper tone wine-colored velveteen bodice a real—and welcome—distraction.

On her way home from the office in a beige wool dress with finely tucked detail, and trimmed pockets, Helen drops in at a favorite shop near Jamaica, Long Island, to select another New York Creation. "It's lovely, isn't it—and it will go perfectly with all of my new Fall accessories! Yes—and there's the label I always look for!"

MOSCOW COUNTRYWOMEN (WEARING KERCHIEFS) CROWD AROUND BISHOP'S CATHEDRAL PLATFORM IN MOSCOW'S SOGGYAVLENIA CATHEDRAL FOR ACTING PATRIARCH'S BLESSING

For almost a quarter of a century Communism, the only official religion in the U. S. S. R., has been trying more or less desperately to stamp out the idea of God among 100,000,000 Russians.

As a people the Russians are the most mystically religious on earth. Their old church under the Czars, part of the Eastern or Greek Orthodox Catholic which developed out of the break-up of the old Roman Empire, was once, in pomp and power, an equal of the Roman Catholic Church.

What the results of the Soviet campaign against the Old Church are remains fogged in statistical controversy. One result, in America certainly, has been the widespread belief that the Bolshevik efforts have been so successful that in Russia churches today are practically non-existent and that a man worships God only at the peril of his life. The pictures on these pages prove, if nothing more, that this U. S. belief is erroneous—that some Russian churches continue to function with their oldtime pomp and glitter and that some Russian people continue to pray with their oldtime faith and fervor.

Reporting the war in Moscow, curious about the status of the church amid official atheism, LIFE's Photographer Margaret Bourke-White uncovered the unsuspected world shown here. Nobody in the Bolshevik hierarchy arranged things for her; nobody stopped her. Her pictures were passed by the Russian censors.

Lenin himself announced that the worship of God must be extirpated from All the Russias. The Soviet Government suppressed the ancient Russian Orthodox Church, which was then synonymous with Russia, and seized 2,000,000 acres of its monastery lands, 1,000 church farms, 2,000 buildings. But by 1921, Lenin found that the peasants of Russia were enraged by this violent assault. He began to tolerate religious worship, but at the same time he set out to "corrupt the Church."

This involved the standard Communist technique of dividing the enemy. The Soviet Government encouraged a Leningrad priest named Vvedensky to found a "Renewed" or "Living Orthodox Church" based on "religious Leninism." Many bourgeois Russians took refuge in this church, but the peasants stonily ignored

it. The Government also indulged all the denominations that the Orthodox Church had persecuted for centuries, such as Baptists, Evangelists, Old Believers, Doukhobors, Seventh Day Adventists, Mennonites. But the Communists found they were fighting not a man-made organization but a dim and powerful faith in an invisible and intangible Being. All that they did only spread the Word of God yet further.

Prison sentences were enforced for telling children about God, but adults were permitted to worship. In 1926 the program of "anti-religious" education was systematized. An aviator testified he had never seen God above the clouds. Holy water and chemical fertilizer were sprinkled on two cabbage patches and the poor results obtained from holy water shown conclusively to the peasants. Off and on, the Communists relaxed the intensity of their drive against God and by 1939 more or less honored their new Constitution's promise of freedom to worship. Russia's reward for this "tolerance" is that today every church in the U. S. S. R. invokes the blessing of God on the armies of atheistic Russia, fighting the hordes of Hitler (see below).

OLD ORTHODOX

Despite Bolshevik persecution and contempt, the ceremonies of the Old Orthodox Church continue to unfold splendidly in Moscow. On these pages are the three heads of the Russian Orthodox Church, the Metropolitans of Leningrad, Kiev and Moscow. The Metropolitan of Moscow is also "Keeper of the Patriarchal Throne." The Patriarchate, abolished by Peter the Great, was revived in 1917 under the Kerensky Government. The first Patriarch, Tikhon, died in 1925 and a successor has never been elected. His nominal successor was exiled in 1925 and died in Siberia. Metropolitan Sergi is the nearest thing to an official Patriarch in the Russian Orthodox Church.

These highest dignitaries of the Old Orthodox Church are unmarried, though priests may marry but not divorce. The Cathedral Dean, for example (on the opposite page), is married. They are not supposed to cut their hair or beards, but the rule was broken during the Revolution to avoid making priests conspicuous. In the Orthodox Church there are today 4,225 churches, 37 monasteries, 5,065 priests, 3,100 deacons and sacristans and a ruling body of 28 metropolitans and bishops. All these clergy have "equal rights of citizenship" in the U. S. S. R. but actually believers cannot join the Communist Party or hold office.

The Government in fact applies unobtrusive pressure on the Church to advance pro-Soviet priests and break anti-Soviet priests. The Metropolitan Sergi has been persecuted. If a priest acts tough, his church may be torn down on the pretext of widening a street. The chief cathedral of Moscow was torn down in 1934 to make way for the Palace of Soviets on the bank of the Moscow River. The Soviet secret police frequently use the connections of the Orthodox Church to make contact with Orthodox of other countries.

These graybeards have known many martyrs. To keep the Word of God alive, priests traveled across the Soviet Union as cobblers, tailors, knife-grinders, carrying their ritual paraphernalia in little bags. Brotherhoods of monks traveled in a body as agricultural workmen's unions. Others penetrated into the organization of the Union of Militant Atheists and wrecked its work. Nuns living together went out to work in factories and offices.

Persecution broadened and deepened the spiritual life of the truly pious in Russia, for under the Czars the Orthodox Church had grown fat and corrupt. Now resolute and able men arose to answer the challenge of the atheists in the hearts of the people, preaching quietly in the fields and hovels. A real faith entered the once-hollow rituals of the splendid and dusty cathedrals. The young began to think about God and Marx and the universe, and wonder whether Marx were enough for a whole life. Many took the solution that Communism was merely an earthly attempt to apply the teachings of Jesus Christ. By 1935 it was permitted to honor such canonized national heroes as Vladimir and Alexander Nevsky, to set up Christmas trees and to take Sunday off.

A shrewd survivor of all these trials is Acting Patriarch Sergi, now 74, partly deaf, with bright subtle eyes and pink, waxy features that can be described as "looking slightly melted from being held in front of a fire." He uses a telephone and a Soviet-made automobile. The Metropolitans of Kiev and Leningrad have joined him in Moscow for the duration of the war. On the day Germany invaded Russia, Acting Patriarch Sergi told the Orthodox faithful, "Christ's Church consecrates all believers to the defense of our country's sacred borders. God will grant us victory!"

THE HUMBLE PRAY TO GOD

The poor of Soviet Russia are here seen in open communication with their God. Whatever the political intrigues and imperatives that have allowed this, it alone is important. In Moscow's Cathedral of the Revelation (Bogoyavlennia), they walk down the row of ikons (iconostases) in the cathedral gloom. They bow before the representations of the holy and kiss the painted hands and feet, until the paint cracks under the centuries of lips. They try not to kiss the painted clothing. In Bogoyavlennia Cathedral two great ikons are the "Resurrection of the Perished" (zhizn) and the "Holy Mother of Kazan." These people still mourn the demolition of their real cathedral, Christ The Savior, to make room for a Soviet skyscraper.

NEW ORTHODOX

The so-called "Renewed Orthodox" or "Living Church" of Russia cuts a shabby figure today. In 1922 the Bolsheviks wrenched it from domination as the true church if church there had to be. The brilliant preacher Alexander Vvedensky, worsted in argument all his atheistic opponents. As a noble as they in Communist dialectic, he proposed that Christ Himself had been the first Communist and made man's converts. But no Bolsheviks came out into the Orthodox Church congregations not at all. As the years passed, offerings of the faithful still poured into the Orthodox Church and only a few layings trickled into the "Living Church" of Alexander Vvedensky. Members of the old bourgeoisie were trying to stay on a Christian most Russian went into its priesthood with scant religious training. They could divorce and re-marry. They could shave their faces, in violation of Old Orthodox practice. Today they total perhaps 10% of all the priests in the U. S. S. R. They have failed to undermine the Old Orthodox Church, but they have found in small numbers their own kind of faithful. Nothing could show the quality of the church better than the business man's portrait of Metropolitan Alexander (bottom, center), in suit which he wears under his robes.

The atheistic Communists have long since turned against even this church. They call Metropolitan Alexander's "Communism" "a crafty deception." They violently reject as Marxist heresy the notion that Communism is an application of Christian principles. They realize too late that even the "Renewed" Orthodox Church, in its puppet and inept way, has helped the people of Russia to find God under the eyes of the OGPU.

PROTESTANTS

The Reformation has come to Russia, 400 years late. It was long overdue. The Christianity of the Czar's Greek Orthodox Church, correctly called "The Holy Orthodox Catholic Apostolic Eastern Church," had badly decayed. Instead of a creed, it believed in a dim, hysterical adoration. It carried fasting and celebration to orgiastic extremes and made Czaristic puppets of the princes of the church. Its religious life has been described as "in paralysis."

With 100,000,000 (70%) pious Orthodox Russians, the Czar's Church bitterly persecuted all other religions except the Moslem. The Bolsheviks therefore promptly unleashed opposition sects of the U. S. S. R. Most like U. S. Protestants are the Baptists and Evangelists shown on this page, whom Photographer Bourke-White found in the heart of Moscow. Beginning in 1870, they now have a total of 300,000 members in the U. S. S. R.

Their religion is truly Protestant. They reject ikons, relics and ceremonials as encouraging the worship of graven images. They utterly accept the word of Jesus Christ and nothing else, though they revere the writings of His followers, subject to their own 20th Century consciences. Their faith is: "We have been saved by God. We must save the others." They cross themselves with two fingers instead of three. The Orthodox priests in the villages still set the mob on their missionaries. They find easier converts in atheists than in the Orthodox. They truly consider Lenin's social program very close to Jesus Christ's teachings and believe that even in Soviet Russia the gap between rich and poor could be closed still further. They call Lenin "a great and clever man with a good heart."

Other churches, when they are allowed to operate at all in the U. S. S. R., include: Moslems with 1,312 mosques and 8,000 mullahs, Roman Catholics with 1,744 churches, Jews with 1,011 synagogues. Those that do operate are supported by the contributions of their congregations. The picture at the right shows the Baptist-Evangelist congregation in a Moscow church vacated by the German Reformed Church last summer.

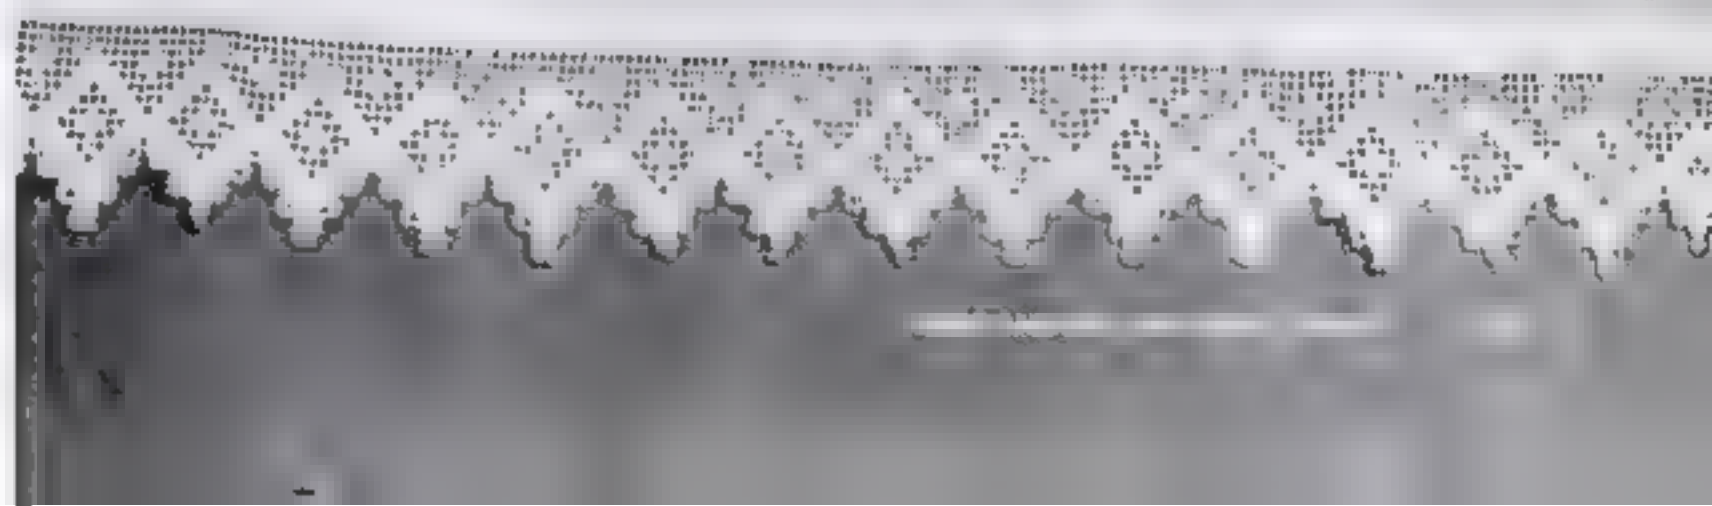

Under Lenin's portrait sits Alexander Karev, 47, general manager of the All-Union Council of Evangelists and Baptists. The Council calls on Baptists to fight now, like Oliver Cromwell.

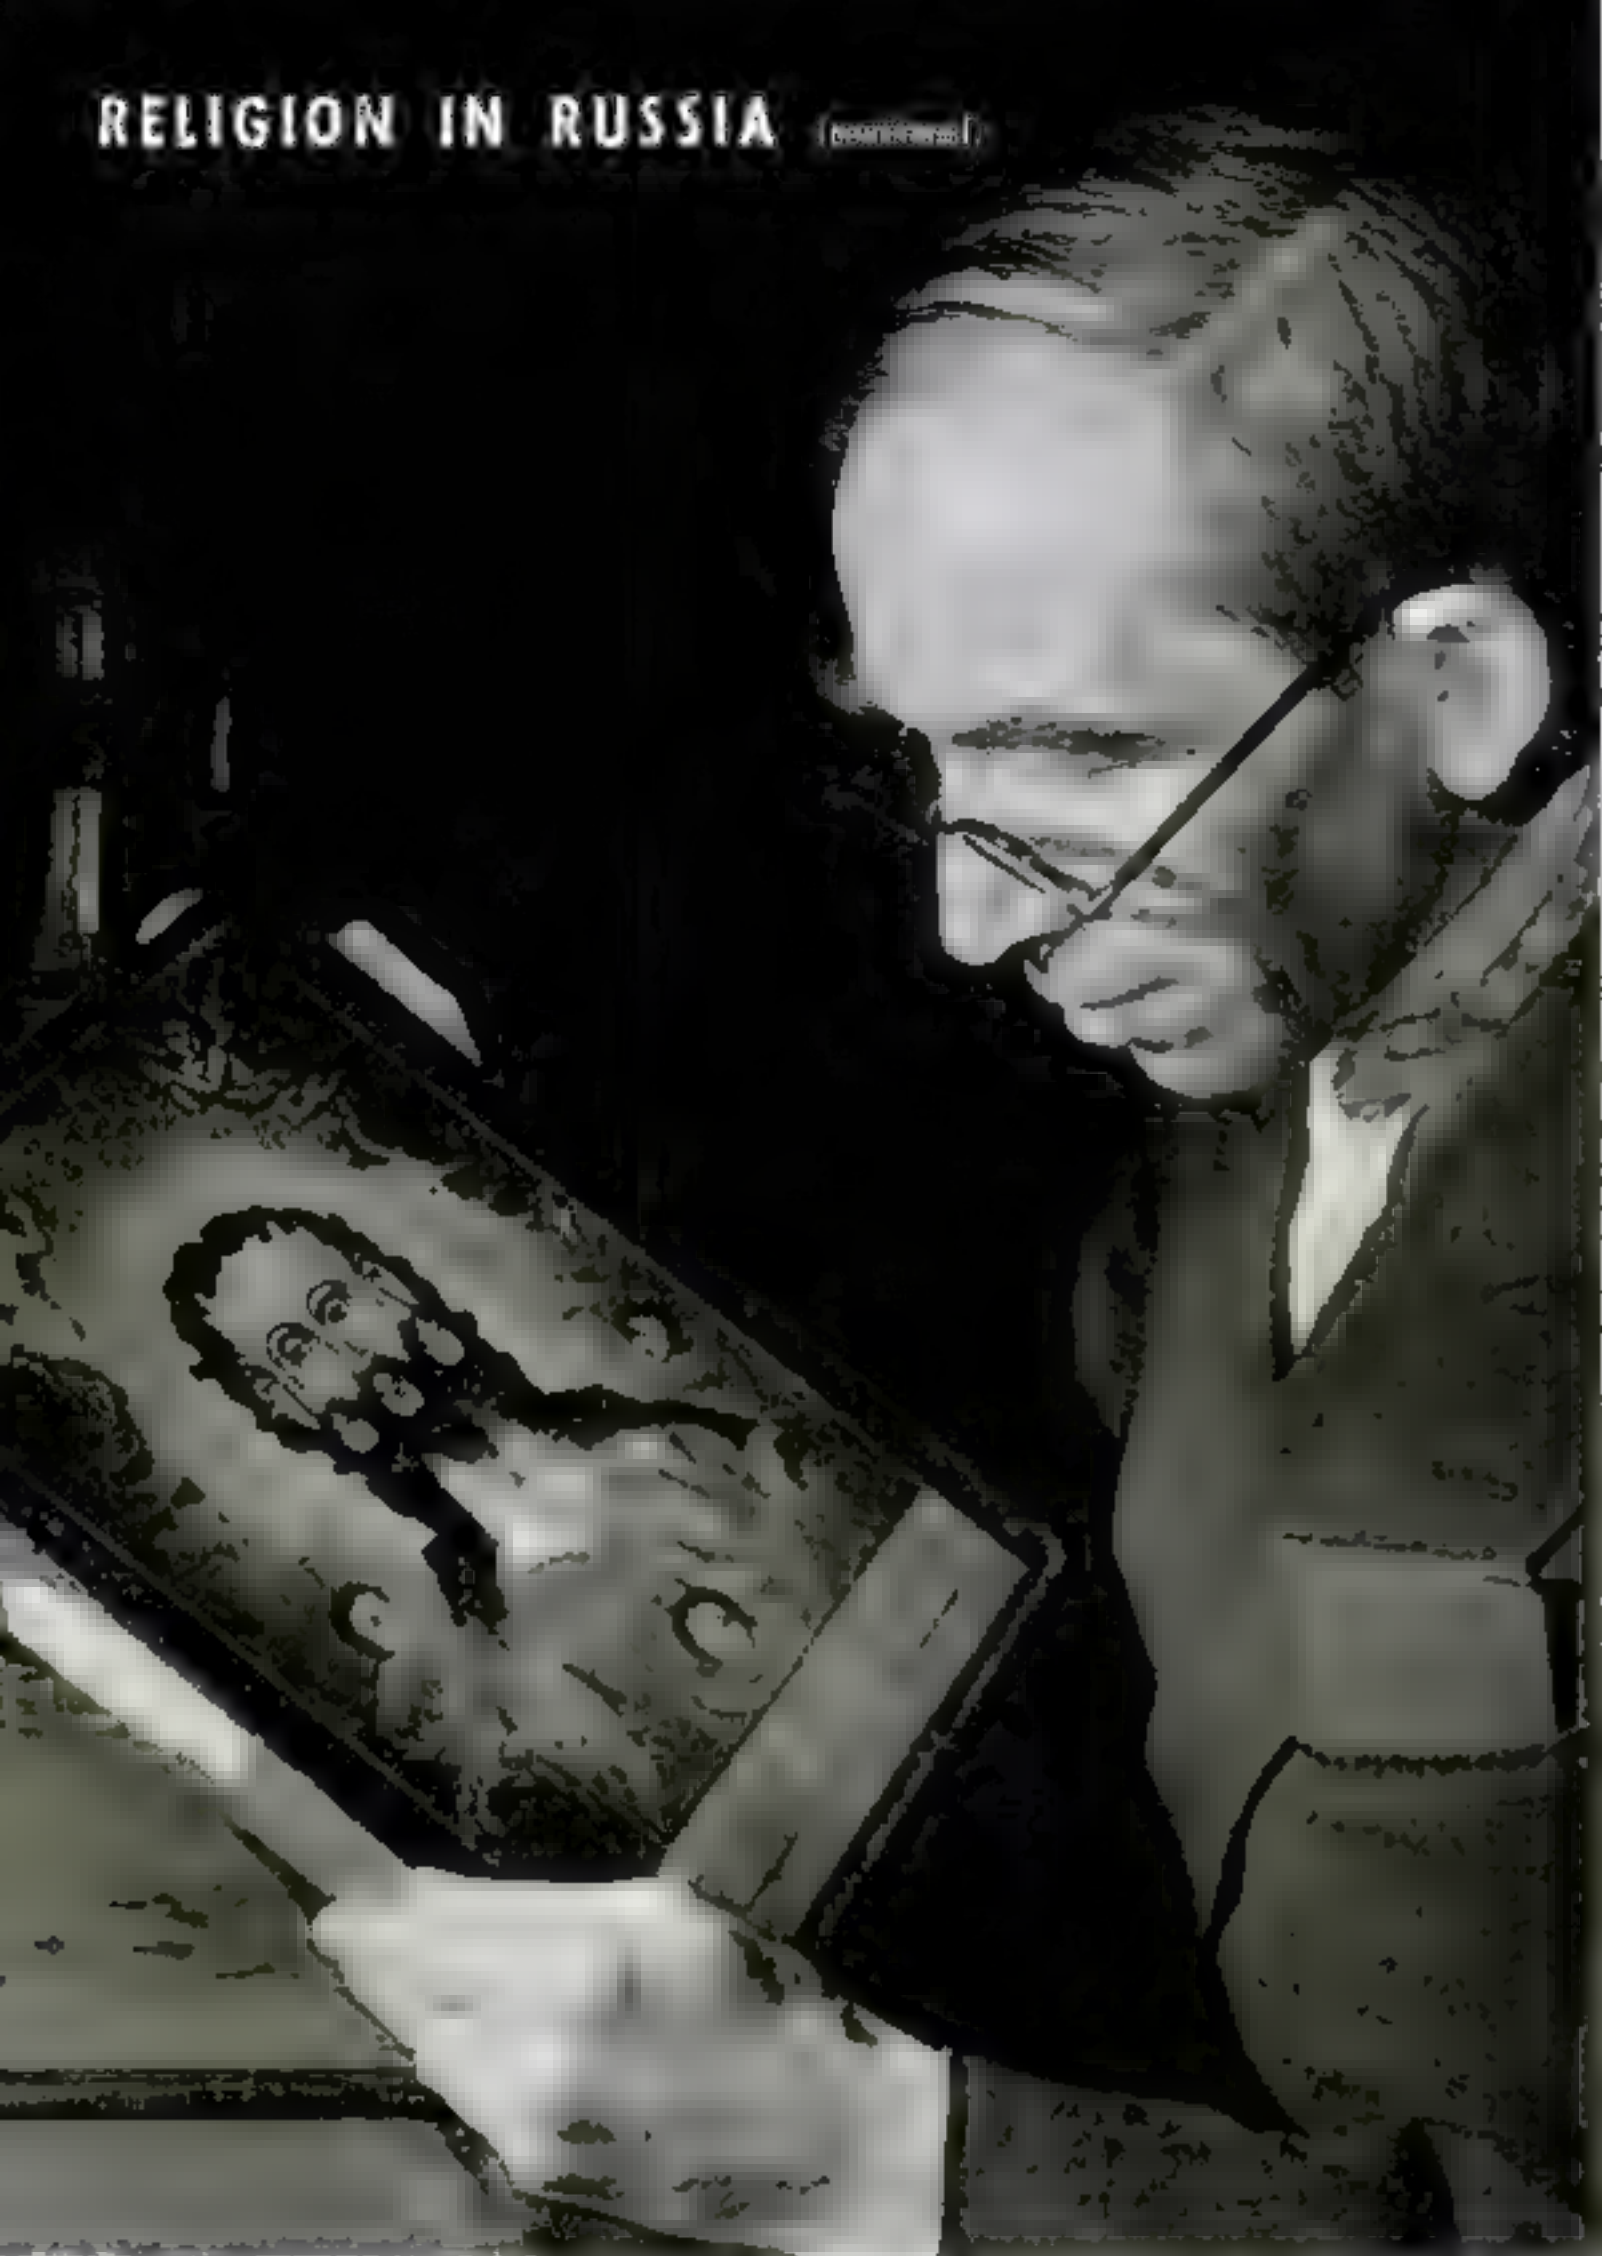

President Orlov, onetime atheist and psycho-neurologist student, calls for victory for the U. S. S. R. (above): "I am a Christian not a patriot! A slacker goes against God's establishment. Protect your country with arms in your hands." Below: he administers communion.

Anti-Religious Museum Director Sergei A. Kusmin, 40, bends a mocking look on rare old Russian Orthodox ikon of a three-faced Christ that symbolizes divine omniscience.

"Religion versus Science" is propaganda theme of pictures of Copernicus (upper left) trying to prove earth revolves around sun, Spinoza being stoned and Columbus being attacked by priests (right center).

ATHEISTS

Russian Communism is the world's most inimical force to all religions today. The significance of everything seen on the preceding pages is that it precisely contradicts the fanatical atheism of the Communist State. "We must fight against religion," said Lenin, "the opium of the people." The Union of Militant Atheists was founded in 1925 and claimed 5,500,000 active members by 1932. Christmas and Easter were turned into pagan carnivals and the Communist press promised, "We shall celebrate neither Christmas nor Easter, but the installation of a new water-pipe." The bodies of saints and nuns were dug up and exhibited to the people. A Communist composer produced the Dance of the Drunken Nuns' Procession.

To perpetuate these Communist excesses, the Government subsidized Anti-Religious Museums, one of which, in Moscow, is shown on these pages. They have stained-glass windows in parody of churches, like that on the opposite page showing diabolic figures in churchly trappings. Theme of their exhibits, like that at top right, is that science has been thwarted by religious organizations in the past. Favorite examples are Copernicus, Spinoza and Columbus. The churches, they say, based their theology on Ptolemy's theory that the earth was flat and fixed, for centuries before Copernicus concluded that it revolved around the sun. The museum curators tell ignorant Russians about the Catholic wars of the Guelphs and Ghibellines, the Gurses and Henry of Navarre, and the peasant uprisings in Spain. Their caricatures show priests beating children with the Cross, brandishing smoking revolvers. God is represented on a gibbet, laughing at the massacre of the workers.

Anti-religion became a religion for the few and powerful. Yet for all this labor, Communists now admit that at least 30,000,000 people still worship God in the U. S. S. R. Other estimates go as high as 60,000,000 adults and perhaps 60,000,000 children, or more than half the population of the U. S. S. R.

The Roman Catholic Church has made a close study of irreligion in the U. S. S. R. It notes that Article 124 of the 1936 Constitution "recognizes freedom of religious worship and freedom of anti-religious propaganda," but notably not freedom of religious propaganda. It asserts that this is actually a restriction on freedom. The other freedoms, "of speech, press and assembly," are restricted to those who uphold and "strengthen the Socialist system," i.e. not to the religious.

Monsignor Fulton J. Sheen, famous professor at Catholic University at Washington, D. C., says in a forthcoming article in America that the U. S. can justify its aid to Russia against Hitler only on these conditions: 1) release of religious prisoners from concentration camps and return of Church property, 2) the end of Communist agitation for the Communist State in America and 3) the exclusion of Russia from the peace table so long as it remains officially Communist. The nightmare foreseen by many Catholics is a Hitler, conqueror of Soviet Russia, entitling himself the world's savior of Communism and the Defender of the Faith, appealing thus to the faithful in Latin America, Spain, Ireland and the oppressed nations of Europe.

Monsignor Sheen believes that Russians are native-pious, that Marxism which came from Germany is unnatural to them and that after the war a great wave of piety may sweep All The Russias.

President Roosevelt last week moved to get from Josef Stalin specific promises of true freedom of worship in the U. S. S. R. And U. S. churchmen put all their goodwill behind this effort to win for millions of anonymous Russians the comfort and joy of worship. Actually, the U. S. S. R. seems to have drifted for practical reasons toward the moral code of the Western World. As early as 1935, New York Times Correspondent Harold Denny reported that the Moscow churches were packed through 24-hour Easter services. "The old bourgeois words: God, love, kindness, honesty and righteousness" seemed on the rise, not because Communists approve of them, but because they work. Even the second wife of Dictator Stalin, before she died in 1932, asked that she be buried in a cemetery, and Stalin actually indulged her dying wish.

The epitaph of atheistic Communism was spoken last year by a grimy Russian prisoner in Finland, when he told his captors, "I have never heard a good word about God—but it cannot be that there is no God."

Twice a year, 300,000 copies of this catalog are mailed from Freeport, Maine (pop. 2,400) to all parts of the world. Back to Freeport come tens of thousands of letters with orders which bring into the Bean store that "a million dollars worth of business a year." The man so busy with the catalog says, "I wish that recently when the U.S. Government offered United Freeport a new $82,000 post office, Mr. Bean countered by spending $82,000 of his own money to enlarge the existing post office on the ground floor of his store."

The fabulous Bean business began with a shoe. Thirty years ago Llewellyn Bean, owner of a goats' skins and shoe store in Freeport, returned from a hunting trip with a used, leather shoe. The next day he went to the woods wearing a pair of old rubbers over three pairs of wool socks. Night had found his feet weary, but not stered. As a further improvement, he had a local woman sew elastic leggings to his rubbers. The soft, warm, crepe-soled Mule Hunting shoe, now worn wherever men walk the woods in search of game, is the result.

Mr. Bean's success with his boot encouraged him to branch off into other

He has constantly been making improvements in his own equipment in the interests of comfort and practicability. When his hunting shoe became successful locally he issued a four-page catalog offering nothing but shoes. As he tried and adopted new merchandise, he included it in his catalog. Today the new fall catalog is an 80-page illustrated booklet.

On page six of the fall catalog is the statement: "Our goods are all tried out by Mr. Bean's organization before they are placed on the market. If you are not satisfied there is no questions asked and your money returned." Scientific laboratory tests may be good enough for city slickers but Mr. Bean prefers the endorsement of a Freeport resident who has given tough wear to a shirt, sock, mit or machete. In a pond near the store Mr. Bean invites customers to try out the decoys, fishing tackle or waders they have bought.

Although about 90% of Bean's business is mail order, the store is ready to serve customers entering Maine woods by way of Portland, 21 miles away, with merchandise, hunting & fishing licenses every day, including holidays, up to 3 a.m. Examples of Bean merchandise are shown on these and following pages.

Surgeon General Thomas Parran of the U. S. Public Health Service launched the campaign which has dragged venereal disease into the open and sharply reduced the syphilis rate among the civilian population. Now Dr. Parran is deeply concerned to keep the disease rate from rising again in the Army.

Surgeon General James Magee of the U. S. Army opposes any move to "legalize" prostitution, backed the law which empowers the Army to banish prostitutes from areas around camps. He was instrumental in starting the U. S. O. drive to provide recreational centers where soldiers can spend free time.

Surgeon General Ross McIntire of the U. S. Navy carries on the policy which has kept the Navy relatively free of venereal disease. Since it is unable to control prostitution in foreign ports it visits, the Navy offers treatment for sailors. Dr. McIntire is also President Roosevelt's personal physician.

NATIONAL DEFENSE VS. VENEREAL DISEASE

U. S. GOVERNMENT FIGHTS TO PROTECT ITS NEW SOLDIERS

by FRANCIS SILL WICKWARE

STATEMENT BY U. S. SURGEON GENERAL THOMAS PARRAN

In the last ten years the U. S. has made great progress in reducing the toll of venereal disease. Today there is danger of this downward trend being reversed. For every time a nation mobilizes its army and starts mass movements of human beings, the potential menace of syphilis and gonorrhea increases. For the first time in the recruitment of any army every man is blood-tested for syphilis and examined for gonorrhea. Those found by Selective Service to be infected are not accepted but health departments require them to undergo treatment. Thus the soldiers are clean to start with and the Army, Navy and Public Health Service are doing all in their power to keep them free of disease.

But the job cannot be done successfully unless the people of the U. S. realize their responsibility. Every citizen must see to it that his own community is cleaned up and kept clean. There should be established in every city a clinic for the detection and treatment of venereal disease, so that every case can be followed back to its source and other possible infections from the same source tracked down. Residents of communities near Army camps have the special responsibility to make sure that the soldiers are given opportunities for wholesome recreation and social life.

Largely through sound, positive articles in magazines and newspapers can this nation be made aware of its problem and its duty. I believe that this article squarely faces the problem and points out the solutions.

The U. S. Army fought two wars in 1917-18: one against Germany, the other against venereal disease. The war against Germany it won. The war against venereal disease it waged with every resource of medicine and morality but, in the end, it lost. Most of the citizens of the U. S. never felt the defeat because, in the general hush-hush that surrounded venereal disease, they never knew the war was being fought. But the American Army came out of World War I with a far higher syphilis rate than it had when it went in. The ex-soldiers went home to spread syphilis through communities where it had never existed before, and thus to create a graver health problem for the entire nation.

Now another great citizen army has come into existence. The Army itself is not yet fighting any foreign foe but its Medical Corps is already in the thick of the battle against venereal disease. It faces an enemy that lurks in many new places. But it has one great advantage: this time it can call the enemy by name and fight it in the open.

For that it can thank Surgeon General Thomas Parran, head of the U. S. Public Health Service, who broke down the taboo on mention of venereal disease and brought the words syphilis and gonorrhea into polite conversation. Parran's great campaign of the 1930's to end prudery in medicine and to treat syphilis as a matter of health, not morals, is one of the epics of medical history. The Public Health Service opened free-treatment clinics all over the country, inspired legislation requiring pre-marital syphilis tests in most States, and endlessly taught that syphilis can be cured. Dr. Parran likes to compare this campaign with the fight against tuberculosis, which also was once considered a shameful disease and which was brought under control by bringing it into the open.

As a result of Dr. Parran's work the incidence of venereal disease among the civilian population has fallen sharply. No one knew how sharply until the figures for the new army showed that among draftees the venereal rate is only one-sixth the rate for recruits in the last war. In the new crisis caused by the sudden growth of the Army, the Public Health Service and the Army Medical Corps have joined their efforts to prevent the venereal rate from surging upward again among the soldiers. They have set as their goal "the first army in modern history that is free of venereal disease."

The history of syphilis is closely connected with armies. Its origin is not known for certain but the dominant theory is that it originated among the Indians in the Western Hemisphere and that the sailors of Columbus returned from the New World with the organism swimming in their blood. After this voyage, some of those sailors joined the army which King Charles VIII was gathering in Spain. In 1494 Charles invaded Italy and captured the genial, concupiscent city of Naples. Syphilis then raced through the army. Soon afterward Charles was defeated and his army of French, German, Swiss, Hungarian, Polish, Portuguese and Spanish mercenaries went back to their homes, spreading the disease all over the Continent. It has raged ever since in an unbroken, worldwide epidemic for more than 400 years.

In World War I syphilis and its more prevalent companion, gonorrhea, turned out to be in some respects a worse enemy than the German Army. Venereal cases in the fighting forces outnumbered the total casualties—dead, wounded and missing—by nearly 160,000. Some 400,000 men were laid up for approximately 7,492,000 days, which meant that the services of more than 20,600 men were lost for a full year. This manpower was equivalent to six infantry regiments. It would have been sufficient to operate 90 World War destroyers and five of the largest aircraft carriers. Thus it is easy to see why the Army regards syphilis as a dangerous saboteur, and why medical officers say that a diseased prostitute receiving upward of three dozen customers in a night can do far more damage than a 500-lb. bomb dropped squarely in the middle of an Army camp.

Today, as always, the professional prostitute is responsible for practically all venereal disease,

Around Army camps, venereal disease lurks in all kinds of quarters. These buildings were places of prostitution when photographed during recent months, though some of them have since been cleaned up by local or State police. Some are old-fashioned city red-light districts like that in San Antonio. Left, center But the newer places of prostitution are in outlying country districts where they are safe from city police and easily reached by automobile. Many hide behind the exteriors of "Dine and Dance" tents and roadhouses.

and today, as always, the prostitutes are making the most of the opportunities which always attend the building of an army—especially a new, young army like the citizen army of the U. S. In every town and city convenient to a camp, prostitutes have multiplied. A recent national survey by the YMCA showed that the number of known houses of prostitution around the camps ranges from zero—in the case of Chanute Field at Rantoul, Ill.—to several score in most places.

The number of "known houses," however, is no longer any index to the total number of prostitutes. Gone is the day when ladies of ill fame were a class apart, keeping to their own houses and having no social contact with the rest of the community. Today the hard and fast line between prostitute and non-prostitute has been blurred. Great numbers of minor girls are employed as "waitresses," "hostesses" or "bar girls" in cheap roadhouses, honky-tonks and the new dine-and-dance tents which have mushroomed around the camps. Most of these girls start with good intentions, and some no doubt hang on to them, but the majority are driven to adopt prostitution as a sideline by a combination of starvation wages and bad environment. This development, needless to say, is encouraged by the girls' employers, since it seems to attract more customers.

Brothels become motorized

As the prostitute has changed, so too has her place of business. In many cities the brothel and red-light district flourish as of old, but they no longer have a monopoly. Like the Army, the modern prostitutes believe in mechanization. If police shut down their houses or hound them off the pavements, they continue business as usual in automobiles, "perambulating houses of prostitution." On pay nights in some camp towns the motorized girls park in likely spots and wait for callers, or drive slowly up and down while keeping a sharp watch for prospects. The guest then may be driven to a resort far beyond the reach of the police. Taxis and rented cars are frequently used in this kind of soliciting, and lately an ultra-modern note has been struck by the appearance of fleets of trailers. At the time of the YMCA survey, at least 100 trailer brothels were parked about in Hattiesburg, Miss., near Camp Shelby, and there were 75 or 80 in operation at Rolla, Mo., where Camp Leonard Wood is located.

Realistic Army men have no illusions about abolishing prostitution overnight. Like every business, it operates to make money, and so long as a profitable market exists it will find ways to serve it. As for the dimensions of the market, the Army estimates that 15% of its men are incorrigibles. Another 15% are total abstainers, being married, engaged, fearful or disinterested. The remaining 70% are subject to occasional lapses of virtue, and this group the Army is particularly interested in protecting. Realizing that a fairly large percentage of men will expose themselves to venereal infection in spite of all arguments, medical officers try to impress the old watchword: "If you can't be good, be careful." Through lectures and motion pictures, the soldiers are taught the dangers, prevention and cure of venereal disease, and are urged to provide themselves with the prophylactic tubes which the canteens sell at cost. Aside from moral suasion, the Army imposes no restriction or penalty for visiting brothels, but it lays down strict rules for soldiers after visiting brothels. Any man who has visited a prostitute must report as soon as possible to an Army prophylaxis station, maintained at every post and in all large cities. The time factor is of vital importance because during the 90-minute period following exposure the prophylaxis treatment is 99% effective. After that the percentage declines rapidly until ten hours later it is probably ineffective. But it isn't easy to get soldiers into the stations on time, even though

AT THIS VERY MINUTE in half a hundred far-flung countries, Pan American Clippers are helping to shape history. They carry the hopes of democracy everywhere.

Upon their prompt arrival hinge decisions and events of world importance. And regularly as clockwork the Flying Clippers speed their vital cargo of men, mail, materials and merchandise along 75,556 miles of routes. By other means of transport this cargo would be many days or weeks longer in arriving.

Today, Pan American Clippers provide a quick, direct and certain link between the United States and Europe. They bind North and South America together, as well as Alaska and the U. S.

They bring the distant Orient and Australasia within days of our shores, instead of weeks.

In providing these two-way bridges the Clippers are more than U. S. emissaries of trade. They are Uncle Sam's ambassadors of good will. They carry America's traditions of freedom to 55 lands. They strengthen our ties, build our prestige with these neighbors. And finally they serve as this country's lifelines of defense, linking our island outposts and bases in one strategic network.

the precaution may save them months of tedious and uncomfortable doctoring. The soldier out on a tear is apt to be tipsy and after a period of carousing he is more than apt to fall asleep.

Failure to report a venereal infection is a court-martial offense in the Army, but many cases probably go unnoticed. To a certain extent this is the Army's fault, since it still invests venereal diseases with a burden of guilt and punishment. Regulations provide that patients draw no pay while in the hospital and require that lost time be made up, with the result that many soldiers prefer to take a chance on court-martialing. The Army hesitates to abolish these penalties, for fear of public opinion, but medical authorities insist it would give a better chance of catching all infected individuals as early as possible.

Army seeks to keep vice away from camps

While the Army tries on the one hand to protect men who have been exposed to infection, it seeks on the other hand to remove the sources of infection. So far, however, the anti-prostitution campaign has not been very effective. The Army has had no authority over civilians and has had to appeal for "co-operation" from local officials to get anything done. If venereal infection turns up in camp, the men are urged to tell where they contracted the disease, which most of them are willing to do, and then the Army asks the local health officers to close the brothels. If no action is forthcoming, the Army can go to State authorities, as it did in Florida last spring, when State police closed infected houses in Pensacola which catered to the Naval Air Station and Fort Barrancas. Finally, as a last resort, the commandant can declare a red-light district out-of-bounds, and send out military police to patrol it. But this has rarely been done. It constitutes an invasion of local rights, and creates great resentment among the citizens.

Here and there the Army has appealed for local "co-operation" and has encountered a strange disinclination on the part of politicians and others to take action against graft-producing and vote-producing vice sections. Usually the towns are eager to help, but haven't the means. Small communities are overwhelmed by the sudden influx of thousands of soldiers, on the one hand, and scores of dive-keepers, pimps and prostitutes on the other. Furthermore, the outlines of a "camp area" are shadowy, and embrace numerous, widely separated towns with different laws and customs, and often spread across the corners of adjacent States. To expect all the communities within such an area to act together is to expect too much. A case in point is the Fort Benning area. In Columbus, Ga., the nearest town, prostitution is strictly controlled, and conditions generally are excellent.

SWANK

At Pensacola, Fla., the police posted the houses of infected prostitutes with syphilis and gonorrhea warnings. Business dropped —

But directly across the Chattahoochee River from Columbus is Phenix City, Ala., a wide-open honky-tonk settlement where vice is not merely tolerated but encouraged.

Then, too, many small-town citizens probably worry more about the safety of their wives and daughters on Army free days than about the effects of prostitution on the enlisted men. In Fayetteville, N. C., soldiers from Fort Bragg are ostracized by the "decent element" in the town, and no nice girl will be seen in public with a soldier. This state of affairs is largely traceable to the uncouth conduct of certain men who were unable to distinguish between the prostitutes and the nice girls in Fayetteville. Recently the State health officer of North Carolina has appealed to Federal authorities for aid in cleaning up conditions in Fayetteville, which he reports as being beyond local control. Here, and in other towns, many well-intentioned folk believe that there should be a return to the old-fashioned, legal red-light district with imported prostitutes to "protect" respectable local girls.

The Army, of course, is dead set against this. The professional prostitute operating in the relative security of a red-light district can receive many more customers than street walkers and consequently can infect more men. Regardless of medical supervision, there is no such thing as a red-light district free of venereal disease. Dr. R. A. Vonderlehr, Assistant Surgeon General in the U. S. Public Health Service, recently gave expert testimony on this point, pointing out that a prostitute may be infected by a client immediately after a doctor has given her a clean bill of health. Dr. Vonderlehr recounted the experience of a Southern town which established a "regulated" area after becoming disgusted with solicitation that was going on. The result was that the new district promptly bloomed with "more or less pornographic" electric signs, and became so notorious that customers "traveled three or four hundred miles to visit these houses." "This town may be interested theoretically in controlling venereal diseases," the doctor added, "but, practically, it has only succeeded in increasing the opportunities for people to catch the venereal diseases."

Whether prostitutes are on the loose, or confined to brothels, it often is very difficult to locate the hidden springs of venereal disease. Down in El Paso recently, Army doctors assumed that most of the venereal cases reporting in camp originated in the unedifying town of Juarez, on the Mexican side of the Rio Grande. Juarez was placed out-of-bounds for soldiers, but there was no appreciable drop in the disease rate, and finally it turned out that a handful of quiet young women in El Paso were to blame. Even when Army towns have succeeded in driving out their own prostitutes they are apt to be inundated on pay days with trainloads of girls from nearby cities. When the evidence is sufficient, the racketeers who boss these commuters (as well as most trailer girls and many of the motorized girls) are prosecuted by the FBI under the Mann Act. Indeed, Federal authorities are aiming not so much at the prostitutes themselves, but at the men who reap most of the profits from their activities. This means an attack on the overlords of the vice rings, and the strict enforcement of wage-and-hour legislation so that girls in cheap juke joints will not be driven to prostitution by starvation. Major Bascom Johnson, Director of Legal and Social Protection of the Federal Security Agency, sums up the objective in one sentence: "We are going to make prostitution an unprofitable racket."

FROM PLAIN TO PLANES IN 120 DAYS

What had been a Texas plain 12 miles west of Dallas is now America's first windowless, air-conditioned airplane factory; 25 acres under one roof. It was completed and planes were being delivered to the U. S. Army Air Forces 120 days after construction began. Within three months the new plant had produced twice the number of planes originally scheduled. Fulfilling defense requirements for decentralization of industry, the Dallas achievement is a tribute to industrial teamwork supported by enthusiastic community cooperation.

Meanwhile, the Army has a powerful weapon available, a bill passed by Congress last July which makes it unlawful "to engage in prostitution or to aid and abet prostitution or to keep or set up a house of ill-fame, brothel, or bawdy house, or to receive any person for purposes of lewdness, assignation, or prostitution into any vehicle, conveyance, place, structure, or building . . . within such reasonable distance of any military or naval camp . . . as the Secretaries of War and/or Navy shall determine. . . ." Offenders may be fined as much as $1,000, and jailed for a year. The meaning of the term "reasonable distance" was succinctly defined by Mayor La Guardia, one of the witnesses at the Congressional hearings, who said: "I would say a distance on the highway . . . such as to make it difficult for a soldier on an ordinary pass to make it and back, and then a distance off the highway . . . so as to make the walking distance so long that he will lose his enthusiasm by the time he gets there."

In a word, this law empowers the Army to establish zones around each camp, within which prostitution becomes a Federal offense. This is a drastic step, and so far it has not been invoked.

Need for recreational opportunities

Under this law the Army has all the power it needs to fight prostitution directly. It can probably reduce the evil to a minimum in the immediate vicinity of the camps, and clean up the places of amusement which the soldiers frequent. But beyond these repressive measures there is need for quite another approach to the problem. Ways must be found to provide other recreation, congenial surroundings and the companionship of respectable girls for the lonely soldier with a day off.

There is an Army recreational program in all camps designed to fill free time with sports, theatricals and so forth. There are, in a few camps, the new hostesses of iron-clad respectability, though only one to approximately 5,000 men. The Army is generous with athletic equipment, and in the South it is building half a dozen recreational centers where men will be sent for two-week holidays. Lately the camp canteens have taken to selling beer at cost in an effort to offset the lure of the towns.

However, the fact is that draftees think of themselves primarily as civilians, and when the week's routine is finished they have a natural desire to get away from camp and return to civilian ways, at least temporarily. It isn't pleasant or reassuring for a young soldier to discover that because of his uniform he is barred from normal civilian contacts, especially with the kind of girls he is used to associating

WHY IS TRANSPORTATION ALWAYS SEIZED FIRST BY THE INVADERS?

Somewhere in Europe (April 4, 1941) special dispatch to the Chicago Daily News by John T. Whitaker . . . "In Mid-December, without warning, Germany took over the Italian railway systems . . . suspended 122 major trains and completed their bloodless conquest of their allies with rolling stock commandeered from them."

Somewhere in Europe (April 12, 1941) special dispatch to the Chicago Daily News by John T. Whitaker . . . "Germany's investment in Stukas and tanks has brought a bonanza yield in Austrian iron, Czech lignite and Rumanian oil . . . rolling stock looted from Norway, the Lowlands, and France."

THUS, as the war's timetable unfolds, one of its major military aspects becomes manifest: this is a war for as well as of transportation. To insure superiority in that field, aggressive Germany has confiscated the rolling stock of all the states it has occupied . . . including that of its allies.

America needs hundreds of thousands of additional freight cars

The dominant role played by transportation in European strategy looms even larger here. Our railroads have been planned and built to fill civilian—not military needs. Now, in addition to their normal function they must take over the task of transporting the vast bulk of raw materials and parts for our growing defense industries . . . of providing an adequate service of supply for our expanding armed forces . . . of creating freight handling facilities to replace coastal ships transferred into oceanic service. Totaled, that's a big order . . . to fill it, the Government says we shall require some 330,000 additional freight cars. It's up to America's car manufacturers to build them. And, given the opportunity, they can. Today, at the Pullman-Standard Car Manufacturing Company's plants, for example, one complete freight car is being turned out every 4½ minutes of each working day—a rate soon to be speeded up.

Given the materials, Pullman-Standard can build a minimum of 50,000 freight cars a year

Given the uninterrupted flow of materials which is the grist of mass line production, it alone can produce a minimum of 50,000 freight cars a year. And, seconded by further standardization in car design as well as larger orders resulting in longer runs, this company has raised its sights to achieve that all-important goal.

Right now, toward attaining it, Pullman-Standard is again keying up its production lines for greater output . . . again amplifying its facilities . . . initiating further reductions in the blackout, by allotting an even larger percentage of its millions of man- and machine-hours to multiple-shift operations.

Toward attaining it, too, it is dedicating the full efforts of its research, engineering and production staffs . . . the full measure of experience and knowledge of metals embraced by its 82 productive years . . . and, the loyal, shoulder-to-the-wheel determination on the part of every worker to make his an all-out effort for our national defense.

In addition to railroad and transit equipment, Pullman-Standard is making a further vital contribution to our defense program by manufacturing Tanks, Trench mortars, Gun carriages, Shells and Airplane wings.

with. A few towns have tried to break down old anti-soldier prejudices, and welcome the men to dances and other entertainments where they meet local girls. But in most places civilians look on the soldiers with cold suspicion. Furthermore, even with the best of civilian goodwill, only a handful of cities can readily absorb and amuse thousands of men who suddenly descend for a day, an evening, or a weekend. Around Norfolk, Va., for instance, the 350,000 soldiers, sailors and defense workers in the Hampton Roads District outnumber the total normal population of the area. On free days, soldiers and sailors stand five deep for blocks along the main streets. Few can fight their way into restaurants and movie theaters, and the filling stations have long lines of men waiting to use the toilet facilities. Beds are so scarce that hundreds of soldiers travel 90 miles to Richmond so that they can sleep away from camp. That is the situation in Norfolk, a city of 214,000. The situation is practically indescribable in tiny communities of, say, 2,500, with no cities nearby. It is little wonder that inhabitants of such communities are fearful of the soldiers. It is less wonder that many soldiers are thoroughly bored and disgusted with their so-called free days, and that through sheer loneliness many of them are forced to buy the friendship of prostitutes.

The U.S.O. and the public can help

Fortunately, a start has been made toward ending this demoralizing state of affairs. In the past three months the U. S. O. has raised over $13,000,000, to pay for the first year's operation of some 350 service clubs to be built near Army camps throughout the country, and at various overseas bases. Only the Government's delay in erecting the necessary buildings has kept the U. S. O. from putting its program into effect already. The aim is to create attractive places where men can read their hometown papers, write letters, bathe, eat reasonably priced meals, entertain their friends, and otherwise enjoy the comforts of home. Each U. S. O. Club will be the liaison point between soldiers and civilians, and will be the scene of dances, theatricals, musicales, and what not. In addition, there will be facilities for soldiers interested in photography and similar hobbies. Lectures are planned and religious services can be held if desired, but the U. S. O. is not going to try any uplifting. The purpose is to avoid duplicating the YMCA "huts" of the last war, where religious tracts were the standard literary offering, and where the price of a hot cup of coffee was a 15-minute talk on the virtues of clean living by an earnest "Y" man. The "Y" men will be in attendance at the U. S. O. Clubs, but they are of a new, changed generation, and no longer specialize in saving souls.

So, on many broad fronts, the fight against loneliness, boredom, prostitution and syphilis goes ahead. The peculiar, precious contribution which civilians can make is the element of warmth and personal enthusiasm difficult to simulate in colossal projects. "Repressive measures, medical and public-health measures, are not enough," according to Major Bascom Johnson. "Other measures, including hospitality, recreation, and the holding out of a welcoming hand to these men is the most essential of all the measures the local community can put into operation to protect the soldiers and sailors from venereal disease."

U. S. O. clubhouses like this will provide recreational centers for the soldiers. But they are still only architects' drawings because of Government delays in building them

Plymouth citizens dance by dusk on the Hoe with a barrage balloon in the background

Life Goes Dancing On the Plymouth Hoe

The worst-bombed city in England frolics for as long as the service band will play

These pictures will surprise and perplex Adolf Hitler. He thought he had done particularly well by Plymouth, the city of three towns and a naval base on the south coast of England. His bombers had left Plymouth a smoking, shattered wreck. Unreclaimed bodies still lie beneath the ruins. The population of 220,000 has been reduced to 140,000, partly by death, mostly by evacuation. A large part of the survivors eat in 17 communal feeding centers. An Emergency Committee rules the city where one walks for mile after mile between staring false-fronts and caverns of rubble. Plymouth was Hitler's especial pride.

But Plymouth is dancing. Every afternoon, except Sunday, a service band begins to tootle on the concrete plaza called the Hoe (or Height). Atop the cliff where the River Plym runs into the Cattedwater and so into Plymouth Sound, the young men and women do the Palais Glide as long as the band lasts. Even if it rains they dance, if the band shows up. On a fine evening, of which there have been few this summer, 3,000 people come to the Hoe. The wind always whistles in from the sea and the dancers dance hard to keep warm.

A reliable couple at these shindigs are Able Seaman Reginald Curtis of the Royal Navy and Gladys Doddridge, who works in a Plymouth butcher shop. Reggie usually plays the trumpet in the band, stops now and then to dance with Gladys. He took part in the British Navy's two great chases, those of the Graf Spee and the Bismarck. He got to be a Leading Seaman and then was "adrift" (A. W. O. L.) and got demoted. "I'm a bit of a Red," he says, meaning that he thinks England could be improved by a few changes. He wears H. M. S. Drake on his cap, a non-existent ship, showing that he works at the Devonport Naval Base. His sailor father was killed in the last war.

Of the 200 girls Reggie claims to have in Plymouth, Gladys is the prettiest and liveliest. She affects to look down on Reggie because he is not as big as Spencer Tracy and Ray Milland. She calls him a "little man wi' big ideas," in the Devonshire accent that sounds half-Irish, half-Scottish, though Londoners think it sounds American. On this night Gladys, who "drinks a port at Christmas," had nothing stronger than grapefruit soda-pop. Reggie doesn't see much in drinking either.

Somehow, between these two and their like, a new spirit is becoming manifest in England. The war has persuaded everybody to work together and to play together. The rich and the poor are in a mind to face hard facts with the same spirit of good-humored competence and resourcefulness. Reggie and Gladys are about ready for anything.

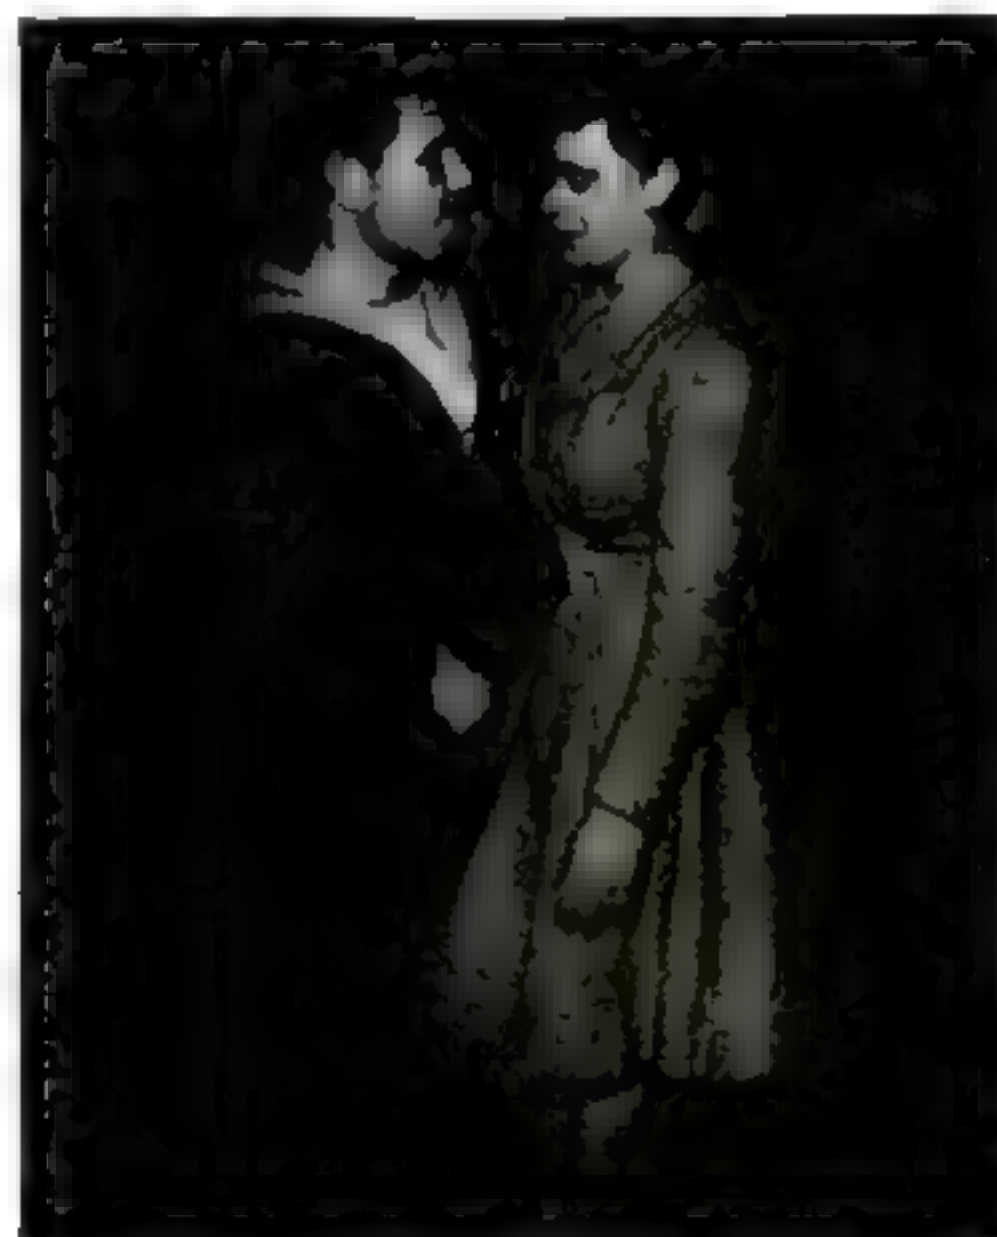

Sub-combatants of Plymouth are allowed the asphalt dance floor to frisk it out on occasion, if it induces them to keep out from underfoot rest of the time. Watching them is one man's full-time job.

Reggie and Gladys step out on the Hoe, while he gives his trumpet a rest. Gladys wears brown suede shoes on asphalt.

On way home, Reggie takes Gladys by way of park that overlooks the moonlit city. They discuss England and themselves.

By infra-red flash, LIFE Photographer Scherman takes the blackout farewell without their knowing it. Both feel dreamy.

"THAT 'STOPPED-UP'

HAVE FLOORED ME,

Gladys Doddridge, 18, has worked in Mrs. Trevan's butcher shop in Plymouth since she left school at 14. Handsome and husky, she hangs war-popular rabbits in a window. She is stern with customers who try to get meat without their coupons.

At the butcher block, Gladys finishes day's work (above). She once thought of becoming a hairdresser. Below, she curls up in her Worcester's afternoon off (center picture). Dream of Love with a love story, Announcing Terry Nunnally, by Catherine Merrell.

Scourge of nude statues in Buenos Aires' Father Jose McDunphy, son of Irish immigrants, here with young children of his parish's Eucharistic Crusade organization.

ARGENTINE PRIEST MAKES SCANDAL

A good Argentinian and a good Catholic is Father McDunphy of Buenos Aires who has long tolerated the sexy Rodin-esque statues that litter Buenos Aires. But he rebelled when one called Progress (below) was moved from the downtown theater section to the quiet little plaza near his Church of Corpus Domini in the suburb of Liniers. Father McDunphy, 34, though his first name is José, is also an Irishman. His war on Progress has become the sensation of Buenos Aires.

To the mayor of his suburb, he flamed: "Not everything which is good in the heart of the city is suitable for every street. This is the quarter where a man lives with his own—the happiness of his wife, the sanctity of his home, the innocence of his children. And if anyone wants to sin, let him go downtown to the port."

Offender is Progress, done in Paris in 1906 by forgotten sculptor Tony Noel, sold to Buenos Aires for $4,800. Father McDunphy's flock now drapes it with newspapers.

"Flower of Youth" is standard Buenos Aires art. It stands in Park of February Third. Nearly all the bad art of Buenos Aires' parks is occasionally mutilated by citizens.

OF BUENOS AIRES' NUDE STATUES

Father McDunphy also produced a letter, supposedly framed by the small children of his parish: "The undersigned, with no qualifications or reasons other than our innocence, our ignorance, and our incomprehension, expect that you will deign to remove from our plaza the sculptural group recently set there. By a natural instinct very suitable to our years, we understand and feel more than anyone else the invisible beauty of all that is virtue. And for now, that is enough."

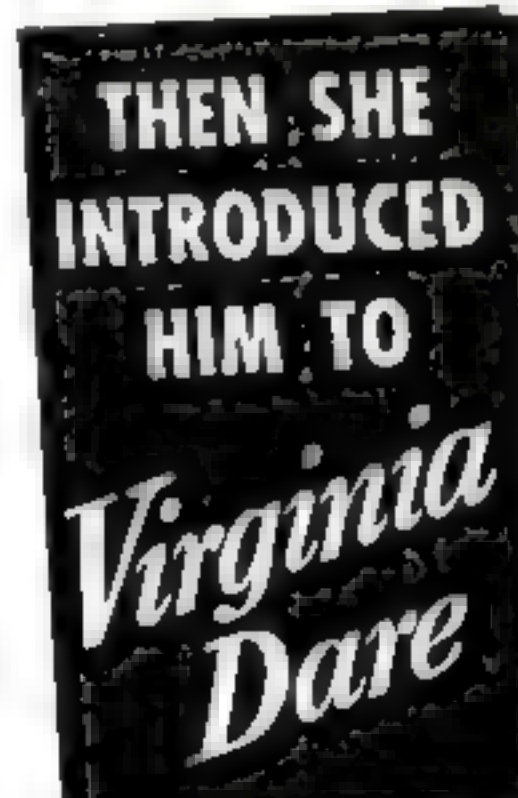

But Father McDunphy was less successful with his parish adults. The local booster clubs split on Progreso. Father McDunphy's view: "The rich have learned to be refined in their vices. The poor man is brutally criminal. He does not know that corruption can be art."

"The Awakening of Sex," showing one young woman still dozing (right), is example of the 19th Century French tone of Buenos Aires' art, originally sired by Rodin.

Priest vs. Statue (con. paged)

Suicide of a mother who plunges a knife into her right breast, while her little boy clutches a flower, is one of Buenos Aires' more repellent statutory displays. (H. S. M.)

"Leander and Hero" by Tassie stands in the Invernio Gardens. Leander gets a kiss after winning the Hebe pout and crown for love of Hero, priestess of Aphrodite.

is a still life imitation of Auguste Rodin's attempts to capture violent emotion in sculpture. It is always great fun for the sculptor, much less fun for the onlookers.

"Man and His Passions" is a monster in Buenos Aires' Plaza Balcarce by Santiano. In tangled group, both man and his passions have grown somewhat weather-stained.

It wasn't as though publicity-wise old-time Pianist Harry Rosenthal was opening a Hollywood delicatessen. Had such been the case, Hollywood's orthodox searchlights, raucous loudspeakers might have sufficed. But Mr. Rosenthal was launching a music shop. So what was more appropriate than an open house for film colony and press, featuring a fetching showgirl clad only in phonograph records! The girl, Evelyn Moriarty of Earl Carroll's, appears below as hostess and entertainer.

Late each summer, along the banks of the Ohio River, one can see skins clinging to the bark of trees. We believe they are skins of cicadas which are commonly but erroneously called locusts. ### A DOG'S JOB

Sirs:

This dog on the farm of Lloyd Donath near Fredonia, Wis., pumps the water for a fifty-cow dairy and the farm home. The treadmill works on the same principle as the usual squirrel-cage plaything except that the wheel is geared to the water pump on a well. This dog works hard at his job, but he likes to do it. It's an old custom with the dog and his forbears. The animals have been operating this and similar treadmills on the Donath farm for more than thirty years.

DUCK HEAD POINT

Sirs:

Last week while flying over the Lake of the Ozarks on an aerial photographic expedition, I noticed a point of land which is known as "Duck Head Point." Up to this time I had always wondered about the origin of the name. However, upon viewing the scene from the air, it immediately became apparent to me why the name was chosen. Consequently I dropped down to a height of 2,000 ft. and made a shot of it with my Speed Graphic. I am sure that you will be able to see the striking resemblance to a duck.

Actual color photograph of tobacco hanging inside curing barn—J. M. Talley inspects a leaf of fine, light tobacco, before aging.

Lucky Strike means fine tobacco

"Take my word for it—tobacco like this is plenty expensive!" says J. M. Talley, tobacco warehouseman of Durham, N. C. "But that doesn't stop Luckies. I've seen them go after this finer leaf in my warehouse again and again—and pay the price to get it!"

Smokers, the higher-priced tobaccos Luckies buy are worth the money because they're milder and better-tasting—just naturally more enjoyable to smoke than the ordinary kind.

Wouldn't you like these tobaccos in your own cigarette?

Remember: the independent tobacco experts see who buys what tobacco. And with these men—auctioneers, buyers and warehousemen . . .
